For the Patriot.

Letter from Paris.—No. 2.

PARIS, FEB. 23, 1859.

FRIEND GREEN: Yesterday was the Anniversary of the birth of Washington—"Father of his country, and one of the few Americans having an European reputation. It was celebrated in this city, by the Americans, by a grand ball, at the "Hotel du Souverain," and as this is the place, par excellence, for doing up such things, we may justly conclude that the memory of Washington was properly "enshrined," on this occasion.—The patriotism of the subscriber did not run in that direction, and hence, for full particulars, you will refer to the New York Tribune, Times or Herald. Correspondents of those prints are maintained here, to "do up" such events. And on this "august" event, you may reasonably expect to see lavished the entire vocabulary of English adjectives. No doubt they had a "good time." That is the way the matter stands here.

The past winter of Paris has been one of more than common mildness. Snow has fallen but twice; somewhat as it may with us in the month of May, in their damp fogs, and melting as it fell. No severely cold days has been experienced; and ice upon the ponds has been formed only twice of sufficient strength to allow of skating. The temperature does not vary much; being uniformly mild. The atmosphere is usually damp, though fogs are not frequent; nor does the smoke of the thousands of chimneys descend to annoy and vex one, as in London. It clouds up very suddenly, and rain descends without notice; or, as we say sometimes at home, "it rains easy" here. "A cold snap" here, is often very desirable, as the streets and sidewalks in winter, are always muddy, owing to the great moisture of the atmosphere. The cold snap makes walking tolerable; and then, the streets of Paris are every where as clean as a house floor.

One who has always lived in Boston, and only occasionally visited New York, Baltimore and other large cities, may be pardoned for boasting a little of its clean streets. But in this respect, Paris excels Boston. In the first place, the streets are perfectly finished; either being paved with blocks of hard slate stone, from four to six inch square on the top-side; or macadamized; or made of asphalt, the same as with us some cellar bottoms are concreted. The curb-stone is usually granite, and the sidewalks either granite or asphalt; never brick. Piles of boards, stone, brick and rubbish not allowed.

Water is supplied by the city to be kept running on each side of the street, and close to the curb-stone, as much as may be necessary, and stopped at discretion. Sweepers are employed to keep clean a certain street, or a part of a street, by sweeping into the running water, and by "swashing" the water up into the street; this, running into the sewers, which underlie all Paris—finds its way ultimately to the Seine. Men and women, by the thousand, are constantly employed; and as their situations depend upon good behavior, and may last for a life-time, great faithfulness is secured. And one great luxury of a crowded city, is thus preserved to a grateful public.

The general police regulations of Paris are as perfect as any in the world, and extend to the control of every thing. Suppose, for instance, ten persons should in Boston, determine each, to open a cigar store on Washington street. They would be at liberty to range themselves all in a row, greatly to the annoyance of our pedestrians. Government here, interferes, and says, there may be one cigar store there, another in such a place, and thus distribute the ten ambitious young men over a much larger tract of country. So of groceries, so of confectionaries, and every other retail trade. Thus, to every part of Paris is secured, the supply near at hand of all its wants. Every kind of business is under surveillance, and must submit its books for annual examination of the police. And the least infraction of any ordinance, if discovered, meets with a punishment as speedy as just. Within my knowledge, one man has been sent to prison for three months for putting water into milk and selling the article as pure milk. Another was fined and imprisoned for putting chick-ory into coffee, and selling the same, notwithstanding he sold the mixture, not for pure coffee, but as it really was—chickory and coffee. Perhaps the police restrictions and oversight respecting all articles of food, and extending to wines and liquors, is as perfect as it can be, and certainly as salutary as it is perfect.

Bread, especially needs remark. Paris may well be proud of its bread, and its laboring and poorer class, may bless their stars for that. Government fixes the weight of bread, that must be given for a certain sum of money to the consumer. This is done every fortnight. And every bread-shop must post up in a conspicuous place the decree, fixing the price for the time being. There are two qualities of bread. And these two qualities are arranged in styles of "loaves" or "rolls," according to the taste of the baker; generally in rolls varying in size, from a cucumber to a fence rail. One tenth of the bread baked here, is in rolls from six to six feet in length! And this is earned in quantities, in paniers, open at each end, as we would so many logs of wood. The second quality, is also baked in loaves, weighing four pounds, and flat; or about the size of a stuffed chair-bottom. The first quality, four pounds for thirteen cents, is nearly double the price of the second. And a part of this price, in time of great plenty, as at this present time, goes to the Government, to remunerate for what it has before paid the bakers, when in times of great scarcity, it obliged them to furnish bread at less prices than cost; the Government paying to the baker a stipulated sum. When this sum shall be fully reimbursed, and should the present time of plenty be continued, a fund will be created against another time of scarcity. Bread is a principal article of food here for all; but especially for workmen, for shopkeepers and for children. And as this is never made "at home," but always bought of the baker, you will always meet, at about the hours for their meals, in the streets, crowds of people with their dinners "under their arms." Fried potatoes are sold hot from the frying pan, and are a common and excellent article of food. Little stands on the sidewalk, where the peeling, slicing and frying process is being carried on, are frequent. One sous, two sous, or three sous, will supply you with many a steaming hot, and nicely salted, as you may desire to carry away in a paper bag.

The social system here, is entirely different from ours. Whether, generally, in families, there is as much good feeling and happiness as with us, a casual observer cannot determine to a nicety. But there is every reason to believe that in this respect there is no difference. The houses here are uniformly from five to seven stories in height, and suits of apartments, all furnished, are let to parties, as may suit their taste or ability. Whatever is paid as rent, by the day, by the week, or by the month, usually includes all the "service" of waters necessary; making beds, fires, and blacking boots—the latter being quite necessary here in the winter season. Apartments are usually very much more ornamented than with us. An ornamental clock on the mantel, is quite indispensable. Live and Danish curtains are common. A canopy for the bed, is what no Frenchman, however poor, will dispense with. Mirrors, chandeliers, busts, statues and pictures abound in great profusion. One saloon and two bed rooms, thus "garnished," on the lower floor, in the Place du Pantheon, and right beneath that most gigantic structure, cost seventy francs per month—fourteen dollars.

In general, every thing here, costs more than with us. Either that is true, or else great advantage is taken of all persons not speaking their language. For it is found by all Americans, that money melts away here very rapidly. One's pocket book soon comes to resemble that one that the Elephant stepped on. Americans residing here for years, uniformly say that it is very expensive living in Paris. And yet Bayard Taylor tells of living here for two years, on less than four hundred dollars. And Aaron Burr is said to have declared that he could live in Paris for seventy-five cents a week! I do not know how those two worthies may have lived—if Bayard will excuse us for giving him such a bed-fellow in this illustration. But the subscriber has seen francs slip through his fingers like seeds on a rainy day. The fact is, one can live here at just what price he chooses. But he can have as good living in Boston for less money.

There is not much liquor drank here. And a drunkard, or a drunken man, is seldom seen. As a consequence, such a thing as a row, a quarrel, or fight of any kind, I have not seen in three months stay, or any disturbance, in the street or elsewhere.

And what is very remarkable, and has "wore upon my mind terribly," is, here has not been an alarm of fire, to my knowledge, in the whole of that time. We read of fires in Boston, destroying school houses, bakeries, &c., to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars; and yet in this city, with a million and a half of inhabitants, in three months how can a Bostonian get on without even an alarm?

Will not some one have the goodness to hollow "fire?" once—only once! Ah! the bells ring; but 'tis only for nine o'clock, and that is too tame.

Speaking of bells, reminds me that they have some very fine ones in Paris, and several very tolerable chimes. But here, and in London, also, the entire effect is lost by the style of the ringing. They ring no tune. It is one straight along—ding-dong-ding; ding-dong-ding. Ding-dong ding;—for a quarter of half an hour. Who in Boston has not heard the chimes of Old North Church ring out "Greenland" upon the clear air of a December night? Blessed chimes! Glorious chimes!!

"Hail Columbia, happy land."

I'm off for Rome. Yours, O. C. R.

Dr Babbitt to Pro Aris

MR. EDITOR:—As your correspondent has been indulging in some egotistical remarks, we will briefly reconsider the prominent points he so complacently claims to have carried. I should have pushed these farther at the time, but I felt rather delicate about exposing an opponent to ridicule; as the object of discussion ought to be to discuss truth, rather than vanquish an opponent.

We will now state the case clearly. In his own words, he says, "Medicine, or poison, is invariably acted on by the system;" and that "Medicines do not act at all."

On the contrary, I say that medicinal agents do often act in the strictest sense, and I have brought proof of it. The simple experiment with a few drops of sulphuric acid, is proof of the most conclusive kind.

Without trying the experiment, he proceeds to say, that "the action is not chemical," and asks, "if it were chemical action, why does it not act after death?" And then answers, "because it does not act at all!"

Chemical agents, which occupy a permanent place in the Materia Medica, act in a definite manner on the flesh, living or dead; and the experiment with acid, will show that it acts on dead matter—even a piece of wood, with energy; and yet he has the brass to say, he has gained the case, being his own judge and jury.

Again, it was so evident on another point, that he let his zeal get the better of his common sense, that I did not care to allude to the subject again. I mean where he says he would not employ the chemical antidote to arsenic in a case of poisoning by it, but would use water only. Is not this good evidence that he would deny every proposition in Euclid if it were necessary to establish his peculiar notions?

It is easy enough to make assertions, and in my opinion he would act more wisely and gentlemanly, in an anonymous attack on others, if he would prove his statements.

From the foregoing, it will appear that his self congratulations, were like Atlantic Telegraph celebrations—rather too hasty.

His attack on Allopathy, was, to say the least, presumptuous; as he has proved to the satisfaction of all, that he does not understand Chemistry; and without this, he can know but little of the systems he writes against.

It is always well not to speak ill of that we know nothing of.

DR. BABBITT.

Miscellaneous.

How a Tailor collected a Debt.

Near the close of the last century, a Quaker knight of the shears and thimble, who exercised his avocations in Philadelphia, was imposed upon by an artful scoundrel, who contrived to get a suit of clothes on credit and afterwards sloped without paying for them. The Quaker was too poor to lose the debt, but like too many others of his cloth, he had apparently no alternative. The account was placed on his books and soon forgotten. Some years afterwards he was examining his old records of debt and credit, profit and loss, when his attention was attracted to this account, when all the circumstances attending it came to mind. Suddenly an odd thought suggested itself.

"I'll try an experiment," said he to himself; "Perhaps I may succeed in catching the rogue and getting my pay."

He immediately prepared an advertisement, in substance as follows: which he inserted in the Philadelphia Gazette. If J—C—, who was in Philadelphia about the month of —, in the year 1797, will send his address to the Editor of this paper, he will hear of something to advantage. Printers in the neighboring States are requested to copy. The latter clause was inserted from a vague suspicion that the rogue had taken up his abode in New York.

Having instructed the editor not to disclose his name to the rogue if he should call, but to request him to leave his address, the Quaker patiently awaited the result of the experiment. In a short time he was informed by a note from the printer, that the individual alluded to in the advertisement having arrived from New York, might be found at a given place in the city.

The tailor lost no time in preparing a transcript of his account, not forgetting to charge interest from the time that the debt was incurred. Taking a constable with him, who bore a legal process suited to the occasion, he soon arrived at the lodgings of the swindler. The constable was ordered to stand off at a little distance, till a signal should indicate the time for him to approach.

The Quaker now rang the bell, and when the servant appeared, requested him to inform the gentleman of whom he was in search, that a friend wished to speak with him at the door.

The man obeyed the summons, and soon both debtor and creditor were looking each other in the face.

How dost thou do? kindly enquired the Quaker. Perhaps you do not know me? I believe I have not had the pleasure of your acquaintance, politely answered our hero.

Dost thou remember purchasing a suit of clothes several years ago of a poor tailor, and forgetting to pay for them? asked the Quaker.

O, no! said the gentleman, blushing slightly; you must be mistaken in the person. It cannot be me that you wished to find.

Ah! John! I know thee very well. Thou art the very man I wished to see. Thou hast on at this moment the very waistcoat that I made for thee. Thou must acknowledge it was of good stuff and well made, or it could not have lasted thee so long.

O, yes! said the gentleman, appearing suddenly to recollect himself; I do remember now the circumstance to which you allude. Yes, yes—I had intended to call and settle that little bill before leaving Philadelphia, and you may depend upon my doing so. I have come here to take possession of a large amount of property which has been left me by will. See! here is the advertisement which apprised me of my good fortune.

Here he handed the Quaker a New York paper containing a copy of the advertisement whose history we have given above. The Quaker looked at it with imperturbable gravity and continued:

Yes, I see thou art in luck, but as my demand is a small one, I think I must insist on payment before thee comes in possession of thy large estates.

The proper signal here brought the constable into the presence of the parties. The swindler was particularly astonished at the appearance of this functionary, who immediately began to execute his part of the drama.

What! exclaimed the rogue in an angry tone; you surely haven't sued me?

Yes, I have, replied the Quaker; and thou shouldst be thankful that nothing worse has happened to thee.

Come in then, said the debtor, finding himself fairly caught; come in, and I will pay you if I must.

The three went into the house together, and the slippery gentleman having ascertained the amount of the bill, paid it in full.

The tailor having signed the receipt, placed it in the hands of his late creditor, with feelings such as may be readily imagined. The swindler took it and for the first time glanced at the various items of which it was composed. He said nothing till he came to the last charge, which was "for advertising," when he broke forth:

Hailo! what is this? "For advertising?" That's an odd charge in a tailor's bill—You're cheating me!

O, no, coolly replied the Quaker; that is all right. I have charged thee the cost of publishing the advertisement, which thou just showed me.

Here the swindler uttered a horrid oath, as he demanded, "Do you mean to say that you caused the publication of that advertisement?"

Truly I did, replied the Quaker, with a most provoking coolness.

You told a—lie in it, quickly retorted the rogue.

Convince me of that, said the Quaker, and thou wilt find me ready to confess the fault.

You said I should hear something to my advantage, if I would come here.

Thou art mistaken, immediately responded the Quaker; I only promised that thou shouldst hear of "something to advantage;" and is it not to the advantage of a poor tailor to collect an old debt?

If I can catch you in the street, said the swindler with an oath and in the deepest rage, I'll give you such a cowering as will not leave any breath in your body.

Nonsense, now, said the Quaker; if thou really intends to do any thing of that sort, we had better step out in the back yard and finish the business at once.

The rogue was completely non-plused by the coolness of the Quaker, and stood speechless and almost petrified.

Now, said the tailor good-naturedly, let me give thee a piece of advice. When next thou hast occasion to get a suit of clothes, thou hadst better not attempt to cheat a poor tailor, but pay him honestly, for then will thy conscience not disturb thee, and thy sleep will be sweet and refreshing. Farewell.

There is no doubt of the literal truth of this story, as we received it some time since from the lips of the Quaker himself.—New York Tribune.

Don't Apologize.

No, good housewife, don't apologize—What if your visitors do find you busied with household duties; what if the children have not their best clothes on, or your apartments are not in apple pie order. It is not to be supposed that your lady friends call on you for the purpose of criticising your house-keeping, but rather to enjoy a few moments of social intercourse. Don't throw a damper upon the interview by exhibiting an embarrassment that chills all conversation.—Don't apologize.

It is a bad policy. It shows a want of tact. Excuse is self-accusation. Little matters which would be overlooked in the flow of talk are brought into unnecessary prominence by apologetic reference to them. This "making calls," is a bore at the best. It is doubly so when the whole interview is spent in uttering and disclaiming apologies. We have known ladies to apologize for their appearance, for their occupation, and even for the lack of elegant furniture in their apartments! O, the vanity of such apologies. Dear lady, don't apologize.

If your callers catch you at an inopportune moment, don't let them know it. Don't call their attention to little deficiencies by apologies. We have known ladies to persist in resisting all attempts to introduce pleasant topics; ever returning to some little sore spot, and applying the salve of apologies. It is all vanity and vexation of spirit. It vexes you and it vexes your visitors. They go away saying, "We'll never call there again."

Meet your friends kindly and cordially ignore all domestic deficiencies; talk yourselves and your friends into good humor, and on leaving they will tell you how much they have enjoyed their call, entirely ignorant of anything and apropos in your domestic affairs. There is nothing like pleasant conversation for making time pass agreeably and sinking out of notice all things that need not be noticed. Small talk is better than no talk at all—apologies are worse. Gossip, if you must. There is no harm in telling the news; who is courted and who is married—if there is no malice in it. But strive rather to elevate your conversation to more profitable topics. At all events, don't apologize.

We are supposing all along that there are really some little matters, in your appearance or your apartments, that are not exactly as you would have them appear in the eyes of visitors. But some ladies, when every thing is to their mind, enter upon a course of apologies in order to draw attention to their imperfections! Such perversity deserves the cut direct. Leave at once—and don't apologize.

And again—don't take your visitors into a cold and formal parlor, because it happens to contain the best furniture in the house. One can see all such things at the upholsterer's and the furniture warehouse. Take them into your living room, where the babies and babies' playthings are about the floor, and where the evidences of occupation give an air of sociability and life to the apartment. Here topics will suggest themselves—but who can talk in a stiff and stately unused parlor, where you are chilled by the formality of every thing about you, and by the knowledge that the lady in waiting will desert it immediately upon your departure. If you value your friends and wish to retain their acquaintance, don't subject them to this penance; don't make them feel, by attending ing them in a cold room, that you are only waiting for them to depart in order to return to your accustomed avocations, but take them to one where they will feel at home and can enjoy their call. Do this and don't apologize.—Portland Advertiser.

Music and Flowers.

Two gifts God has bestowed on us that have in themselves a guilty trait, and show an essential divineness. Music is one of them, which seems as though it were never born of earth, but fingers with us from the gates of heaven. Music, which breathes over the gross or sad, or aching heart, to inspire it with a consciousness of its most mysterious affinities, and to touch the chords of its undeveloped, unsuspected life. And the other gift is that of flowers, which though born of earth, we may well believe, if any thing of earthly soil grows in the highest realm—if any of its methods are confined—if any of its forms are identical there, will live on the banks of the river of Life.—Flowers, that in all our gladness, in all our sorrow, are never incongruous—always appropriate. Appropriate in the Church as expressive of its purest and most social themes, and blending their sweetness with the incense of prayer. Appropriate in the joy of the marriage hour, in the loneliness of the sick room, and crowning with prophecy the foreheads of the dead. They give completeness to the associations of childhood, and are appropriate even by the side of old age; strange as their freshness contrasts with the wrinkles and the grey hairs; for still they are suggestive, they are symbolical of the sun's perpetual youth, the inward blossoming of human talent, the amarantine crown. In their presence we feel that when the body shall drop as a withered calyx, the soul shall go forth as a winged seed.—Rev. E. H. Chapin.

Curiosities of the Earth.

not venture and love can scarcely come. Fear not to defy iniquity and expose sin, but take your weapons and your strength from the hands of the Omnipotent, and look to him for your reward. Be earnest, but be humble. Thus, without the trumpeting of fame or the brazen finger of renown, the fabric of your good works will rise to compel the world's unwilling admiration, and lead men to glorify your Father and Great Teacher in Heaven.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

EXHIBITION.—Our readers will not forget the Exhibition of the Adams Literary Association at the Town Hall on Fast evening.

As we understand that an entirely new programme will be presented, we trust that all those who were present at their interesting entertainment a few weeks since will not fail to go again. The young ladies whose singing was so well received on that occasion, will again be present, with a new selection of songs; and our citizens may feel sure of getting the worth of their money, while they contribute something to the support of a society which is doing much for the advancement of the rising generation.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, March 31, 1859.

Close of the Session. by adjournment.—Hancock House purchase in doubt.—Loan and Fund Associations.—County Tax—Sale of Poor Milk. The question whether Drunkenness should be punished as a crime. Mr. Kimball's Bill.

The present Session of the Legislature is rapidly drawing to a close;—to meet however by adjournment in September next. It is safe to predict that the Autumn Session will occupy at least three months; thus using up half of the present year in State Legislation, and increasing the debt of the Commonwealth. So that we are liable to be inflicted with a State tax for some years to come.

The Bill providing for the purchase of the Governor Hancock House, spoken of in my last, came up in the Senate on Monday with the House Amendment, in which the Senate concurred. As the unanimous consent of the Board of Commissioners is required, for the purchase, it is still in doubt; one of the Commissioners at least being opposed to it.

A Bill is before the Senate concerning Loan and Fund Associations; prohibiting them from transacting other business than that implied by their title; and also, from receiving deposits of money otherwise than such as may be paid in, by the Shareholders on their several shares. The Loan Fund Associations of our State are doing a great business, and may be all right. There is such complexity in their manner of operation, that it is difficult to make the borrower understand the modus operandi in all its details. Hence, there often arises an unfounded prejudice against these Associations, from misapprehension. The whole system of investment should be made plain to all, and better results would follow.

The tax for the County of Norfolk, is to be this year $50,000; nearly the same as last year.

The Bill to punish fraud by the sale of adulterated milk, and to provide for sealing measures used in its sale, has passed to be engrossed in the House. An amendment was adopted making it unlawful to feed milk cows upon distillery slops and similar unwholesome stuff. Penalty for violating its provisions, twenty dollars for each offence. The Bill will probably pass in the Senate.

The State Commissioners were authorized to sell the Hancock House in Hancock street formerly occupied by the Sergeant-at-Arms. Quite an interest has been manifested the past week by the Legislature for the poor drunkard. A Bill has been before the Senate to prohibit the punishment of drunkenness as a crime. Mr. Butler made an eloquent speech, wishing to treat drunkenness as a disease and not as a crime; and he with other Senators advocated an asylum or home for the inebriate. The subject has also been discussed in the House. Mr. Kimball has introduced the following Bill on the subject:—

to regulate the sale of Drunkenness. Be it enacted, &c. Sec. 1. No person hereafter shall be fined or imprisoned for a single act of drunkenness. Provided, however, that police officers and constables may arrest and detain, until sober, persons found drunk or disorderly, but no police or constable shall be allowed to receive any fee or reward for, or on account of, any such arrests, further than shall be paid such officers for their services by the city or town in which they reside.

Its passage is very doubtful. During the past week there have been debates daily, on matters coming up for the order of the day, and many eloquent speeches have been made by gentlemen of different political views. Mr. Morton of Quincy, who is always on his post of duty, has spoken on several subjects, and is always listened to with respect. x.

SPRING GOODS. It gives us pleasure to inform the ladies that a large and rich variety of Spring Goods have been received by that gentlemanly and extensive dry goods merchant, Caleb Packard, embracing the newest and prettiest assortment ever presented to our view. Who is to have the first choice from this rare and beautiful collection?

One of the worst complaints that fastens on man is the piles. And it may well be called Piles, as it heaps up tormenting misery on all its subjects. But some of the worst cases have yielded to a constant application of "My Mother's Salve." Any afflicted with this disease had better try this Salve. It will relieve, and may cure. It has cured many obstinate cases. See advertisement.

THE JACKSONVILLE TRAGEDY. The remains of Major J. L. Gregg, who was shot at Jacksonville, (Fla.) arrived in this town on Tuesday last, and were entombed in the afternoon, under the impressive services of the Episcopal Church. We learn from good authority, that the assassin was charged by the boards of the hotel with too great intimacy with a married lady, and was frequently joked about the matter, but not as much by Maj. Gregg as by the other boarders, when he finally became exasperated to madness; in this state, he sought revenge on some one, and meeting Maj. Gregg in the hotel hall, he made him his victim by shooting him through the heart, remarking after the fatal shot, that he had "sacrificed his best friend." This appears to be a simple statement of facts in the case.

FARMERS, GARDENERS, NURSERYMEN, ETC. Now is the time to purchase of Blake & Co., of Boston, whose advertisement may be found in to-day's paper, the various agricultural implements, and to select garden seeds, from a large and desirable stock, which will be sold twenty per cent. cheaper than can be obtained elsewhere,—for the simple reason that it is to close a bankrupt's effects. Bargains can here be obtained for a short time, as the Assignee wishes to settle his accounts.

CLAM CHOWDER. Recollect that "Yankee Seth" is prepared, to-day and evening, for customers.

Deaths.

In this town, on the 27th ult., Mrs. Lucy Maria, wife of Mr. Francis Veazie, aged 24 years.

On the 29th ult., George, the youngest son of Mr. George and Mrs. Lucinda A. Curtis, aged 16 months.

On the 1st inst., Sarah T., daughter of Mr. Joseph and Mrs. Catherine Newcomb, aged 11 years.

On the 11th ult., George, only child of Mr. George and Mrs. Josephine Wyman, aged 2 months.

Dear as thou wert, and justly dear, We will not weep for thee: One thought shall check the starting tear; It is, that thou art free.

And thus shall faith's consoling power The tears of love restrain: O, who that saw thy parting hour Could wish thee here again?

Full oft, we see the brightest thing That life has laid on high Smile in the light, then drop its wing, And fade away and die.

And kindly is the lesson given; Then dry the falling tear: They came to raise our hearts to heaven; They go to call us there. A. M. C.

Land for Sale.

BY virtue of a License of the Court of Probate and Insolvency for the County of Plymouth, will be sold at Public Auction, on WEDNESDAY, the 20th of APRIL, inst, at 3 o'clock, P. M., on the premises, about the Hingham and Quincy Turnpike, in Hingham, east of and adjoining the Town Farm, and belonging to the Estate of JAIROS TRIAYER, deceased.

Said Land is advantageously situated in the vicinity of Hingham and growing Villages, and near the sea shore. It has an extensive front upon the street, giving it a prospective value for building purposes rarely surpassed; while from the variety and excellence of the soil, it is well adapted to all the purposes of agriculture, having been occupied for a number of years for mowing and pasture.

To the Capitalist it offers an opportunity for a safe and profitable investment, yielding a good percentage in annual returns; and at the same time from its location and surrounding advantages, it must have a steady and permanent increase in value.

Should the weather be stormy, the sale will take place the next fair day. For further particulars inquire of Q. BUCKNELL, Administrator, or C. W. SEYMOUR, Auctioneer, Hingham, April 2, 1859. 3w

Poetry.

The Old Turnpike.

We hear no more of the clanging hoof,
And the stage-coach rattling by;
For the steam-rolling rules the travelled world,
And the old pie's left to die.
The grass creeps o'er the dimly path,
And the steady daisies steal
Where once the stage-horse, day by day,
Laid his iron heel.

No more the weary stageer dreads
The toil of the coming morn;
No more the bustling landlord runs
At the sound of the echoing horn;
For the dust lies still upon the road,
And bright-eyed children play
Where once the clattering hoof and wheel
Rattled along the way.

No more we hear the cracking whip,
Or the strong wheels' rumbling sound;
And ah! the water drives us on,
And an iron horse is found!
The coach stands rusting in the yard;
And the horse has sought the plough;
We have spanned the world with an iron rail,
And the steam-rolling rules us now.

The old turnpike is no more,
Wide open stands the gate;
We have made us a road for our horse to stride,
Which we ride at a flying rate.
We have filled the valleys and levelled the hills,
And tunneled the mountain side;
And tumbled the rough rag's dizzy verge,
And the steam-rolling rules us now.

On—on—on—with a haughty front!
A puff, a shriek, and a bound;
While the tardy echoes wake too late,
To bubble back the sound;
And the old pie is left alone,
And the stage-coach seeks the plough;
We have circled the earth with an iron rail,
And the steam-rolling rules us now.

There Goes the Chany.

Seventeen do so put me out,
"Rosin", "tobacco", "bakin",
Or whatever work's about,
Somewhere always broken;
Hot or cold, blow low, blow high,
Weather fair or rainy,
Crash! down stairs I hear it fly,
There goes the chany!

One had need in wealth to roll
Like an angry planter,
Now a dish, and then a bowl,
Sometimes a decenter,
Then young buttons shows his face,
Strutting like a geyser,
What I said turns out the case—
There goes the chany!

Warred from day to day,
"Troubles and vexations",
Money thrown and thrown away,
Enough to tire Job's patience,
In my life what's broke would make Quite a miscellany;
Smash! bang! double-no mistake,
There goes the chany!

When they've got their own to find,
It so be they're in a lather,
Plates and dishes then they'll mind
How they clean and carry;
"I'll come home unto 'em then,
Being so bareheaded",
Dust the girls'—at again!
There goes the chany!

A Word to the Wise.

Love laid a little maid,
Rumping through the meadow;
Headless in the sun she played,
Scarcely of the shadow.
"Come with me," whispered he,
"Listen, sweet, to love and reason",
"By and by," she mocked reply;
"Love's not in season."

Years went, years came;
Light mixed with shadow;
Love met the maid again,
Dreaming through the meadow.
"Not so coy," urged the boy,
"List in time, to love and reason",
"By and by," she moved reply;
"Love's still in season."

Years went, years came;
Light changed to shadow;
Love saw the maid again,
Waiting in the meadow.
"Pass no more; my dream is o'er;
I can listen now to reason",
"Keep these eyes," mocked the boy,
"Love's out of season."

Anecdotes.

The landlord of an hotel entered the sleeping apartment of a boarder, in an angry mood, and said:
"Now, sir, I want you to pay your bill, and you must! I've asked you for it often enough, and I tell you now that you don't leave my house till you pay it!"
Good! said the lodger; just put that in writing; make a regular agreement of it; I will stay with you as long as I live!

An awkward man, attempting to carve a goose, dropped it on the floor.
There, now! exclaimed his wife, we've lost our dinner.
Oh! no, my dear! answered he, it's safe; I have got my foot upon it.

You would be very pretty indeed, said a gentleman patronizingly to a young lady, if your eyes were only a little larger.
My eyes may be very small, sir, but such people as you don't fill them!

How came such a greasy mess in the oven? said a lady to her Irish maid-of-all-work.
Why, replied the girl, the candles fell into the water, and I put them into the oven to dry.

And your father, said a boarding-school lad to his companion, has only sent you two dollars—he must be a mighty mean man.
Well, I don't know; two dollars is considerable.

Whenever my father sends, he never thinks of offering me less than ten.
Indeed! And how often does he send.
About! Never.

Hall's Great SCROFULAR REMEDY.

THIS Purely Vegetable Preparation is pleasant
and agreeable to the taste, and simple in its action, causing neither vomiting nor purging. It acts directly upon the primary cause of disease,
regulates the bowels, removes all vitiated secre-
tions, giving a healthy action to the liver and consequently to the stomach. It overcomes that feeling of languor which is often experienced in the Spring and Summer, and restores and restores the vital energy and Physical Strength.

In thousands of cases of Scrofula and Scrofu-
lous Humors, such as Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scald Head, Tumors, Ulcers, Boils, Carbuncles, Warts, Glands, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Fever, Sore, White Swelling, Dropsy, Blisters, Barber's Itch, Piles, Old Sores, and all diseases which manifest themselves by Eruptions or Eruptions on
the Skin, it has been used with the most gratifying
success, after every other known remedy has been
tried and failed to afford relief.

It is also an efficient cure for Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Flatulency, Constipation and Derangement of the Urinary Organs.

It is an infallible remedy for irregularities and
other diseases peculiar to FEMALES, such as Weakness and Pain in the Back, Stomach, AFfections of the Kidneys, Palpitation of the Heart,
Dizziness and Headache.

It can be given with perfect safety and most desirable results in all cases, to any person from infancy to old age.

Made and sold by WM. SMITH HALL, Sole Proprietor, Quincy, Mass., to whom all orders must be addressed.

Sold also by Redding & Co., No. 99
Union Street, Boston, and all Druggists and Medicine Dealers throughout the United States.

YOU HAD BETTER
TRY
My Mother's Salve.

THIS CELEBRATED
PREPARATION has obtained an enviable
and world-wide reputation for its great curative properties, and has been the agent for relieving so many sufferers, restoring them to
health and usefulness, that the proprietors
feel it a duty they owe to the public for their generous patronage bestowed upon this Salve,
to make it accessible to rich and poor, that all
afflicted may avail themselves of its healing
qualities.

"My Mother's Salve"

IS A PERFECT CHEMICAL COMPOUND, prepared
from ROOTS, HERBS AND GUMS, gathered from
the forest, and possesses

HEALING, SOOTHING AND PAIN-RELIEVING VIRTUES

never before combined in a Salve or Ointment.

"My Mother's Salve"

IS SAFE AND EFFECTUAL, and all those troubled with RHEUMATISM, SALT RHEUM, ERYSIPELAS, GOUT, PILLS, and such
like diseases, will find in its use great relief,
and in most cases a permanent cure.

"My Mother's Salve"

IS A BURN OR SCALD, takes out the fire, soothes the irritating pain, and heals the wound more speedily and effectually than any other preparation.

"My Mother's Salve"

IS WORTHY OF CONFIDENCE, and thousands having used it and recommended it to their friends, is a test of its worth. DIRECTIONS FOR USE

"My Mother's Salve"

Are simple. Every mother and nurse know how to spread a plaster, and dress a sore, and all who use the Salve will apply it in proportions, renewed at times, as good judgment may direct. For Rheumatism and other pains, rub the parts smartly with the Salve.
In cases of Cough, Tightness of the Lungs, Sore Throat, and such like ailments, rub as in cases of Rheumatism. In any case of pain a good result follows the use of this Salve. Prepared by A. M. BECK.

For the Patriot.
"Think of Living."

MR. EDITOR:—I hope Dr. Babbitt will not take to himself any home thrusts I may happen
to make, but will lay all to the inconsistencies of the system he advocates. His delicacy is wholly gratuitous in refraining from exposing an anonymous opponent to ridicule by exerting his argumentative powers in establishing what he believes to be the truth. I am not at all disposed to be personal in making "an anonymous attack on others;" it is the erroneous doctrine that others hold that I attack and oppose. I believe the cause of truth would not be advanced by signing my name
to my articles, and being, like Uriah Heep, very humble and modest without, I prefer to remain incognito. If we confine ourselves to the legitimate field of discussion there will be no occasion for personal animadversions. If the doctor will answer my arguments to the best of his ability, I will do the same.

I said food or medicine, nutrient or poison, is invariably acted upon by the living system; and that medicines do not act at all.
He instances, "as conclusive proof of the contrary, the experiment with sulphuric acid applied to the finger, which I showed to be fallacious by stating the fact that the action is confined to the living parts, being vital warfare against a poisonous enemy; or more explicitly, the nerves give notice of the presence of something incompatible with the natural condition of the system, when the blood vessels are stimulated to excessive action to preserve the vitality of the organ,
and if it, the inflammation, be too great, and too long continued, mortification ensues, and not until then, when vitality has departed,
can chemical action occur.

He misconstrues my meaning by omitting
the italicized words in the following quotation, which is in reference to medicine,
not sulphuric acid, which he would hardly claim as a medicine:—"If it were chemical action, why would not the medicine act after death the same as it is said to act before?"

'Simply because it does not act at all.' If Croton oil when applied in an infinitesimal
drop "to the tip of the tongue" will seek out its "special affinity" for the alimentary canal,
to manifest its cathartic property, why will it not do the same after death, or when the bowels and lower extremities are paralyzed, as in some cases of paraplegia? It is because the remedial virtue or active principle
does not reside in the medicine, if it did it would exhibit the more potency in these circumstances where vitality has departed; for vital and chemical action are entirely antagonistic to each other. Dr. B. will confer a favor if he will explain the modus operandi
of any "chemical agent which acts in a definite manner on the living flesh."

Medical men in their studies on the subject of disease have made chemical science
their judge; chemical principles their attorneys; and chemical facts their witnesses.
Hence, it is not strange that in a chemical court a chemical verdict is rendered on a purely vital question. Neither is it strange that I should be accused of ignorance of chemistry when I deny the propriety of the verdict. Were I ignorant of chemistry it would not be more creditable to me than ignorance of the laws of vitality is to a physician.

In regard to the dose of arsenic, I would say that sesqui-oxid of iron is not an infallible antidote, but if it were it does not follow that medicine is necessary, for skillful water-
cure treatment will answer the same purpose.
But, admitting the fact that the two poisons
unite chemically in the stomach, it is not a fair

illustration of the action of medicines, because the arsenic had not become a part of the living system, through the natural process of digestion and assimilation; if it had, there could be no chemical action, because the vital principle is superior to the chemical.
As I have said before, that which is supposed to be the action of the medicine is in reality the vital action which occurs in expelling the medicine from the vital domain,
where it has no right to remain, being not only useless, but injurious; and the more injurious it is the greater will be the vital struggle to get rid of it, and the more powerful the medicine appears to be.

Appearances are sometimes deceptive.

Miscellaneous.

Marrying at Cross Purposes

Mrs. Granger, though a widow, had so preserved her youthful freshness and bloom, that at thirty-seven she might readily have been mistaken for ten years younger, but for one little circumstance. This was a daughter, well grown, and looking full nineteen, the age
which she had really attained. Now Mrs.
Granger, like most widows, had no objection to a second marriage; but who would think of addressing a widow with a daughter of marriageable age?

Mary Granger was a sensible, considerate girl, and devised a way to remedy this embarrassment.

Early in June, mother and daughter were discussing the point where they should go to
for the summer.

I am for Saratoga, said the mother.

And I for Newport, said Mary.

But think of the walks, the mineral water,
and all the attractions of the Springs!

So I do. They are well enough in their way. But I like best to be at the sea-side.

They have such delightful hops at the Ocean House. Besides, there is the beach and the daily bath.

We can't go to both places, said Mrs.
Granger, in a tone of indication.

Why not? asked Mary.

The season is so short, it would scarcely be worth while. Besides, it would be so much trouble to go from one place to the other.

You don't understand me, mother; I have a better plan to propose. You like Saratoga.

There is no reason why you should not spend the season there. I like Newport. I can go there.

You would not go alone?

No, Mrs. Bickford is going in a few days.

She shall be my chaperon.

But it would seem singular for us to separate.

Not at all, mother. It will be supposed that you go to Saratoga for your health, while I, having received an invitation to go to Newport, choose that place in preference.

Mrs. Granger finally acceded to this proposition. It struck her at once that Mary's absence would be beneficial to her in more than one way. So, after a feeble opposition, she yielded.

Merely adding that the first of the season
found mother and daughter respectively at Saratoga and Newport, we pause for a moment to introduce two new dramatic persons.

In a well appointed room at the Astor House, New York, sat two gentlemen. Giving the priority to age, we will speak of the eldest first.

Mr. Geoffrey Tarbox was turned of forty,
but was a well looking man still. His hair was slightly grey in spots, or would have been but for the assiduous use of a certain restorative, the miraculous effects of which may be read in detail in any of the daily papers. His youthful appearance was increased by his dress, which was in the height of fashion.

The younger man was tall and well made,
and probably two or three and twenty. He bore sufficient resemblance to his companion to lead to the supposition, which indeed was correct, that he bore to him the relation of
son. He was known as Edward Tarbox.

Ned, said the parent, languidly tossing
aside the cigar which he had been smoking.
I have been thinking of you for the last fifteen minutes.

An evidence of paternal interest as gratifying as it is unexpected, returned the man, smiling. May I ask to what thoughts I have been fortunate to give rise?

I was thinking how confoundedly old you were getting, Ned.

Thank you, father; I hadn't begun to feel troubled on that score.

Don't call me father, it's vulgar. Besides,
who wants it thrown at him that he has got a son that looks as old as he does?

Really, I think you exaggerate a little. I have no occasion yet for hair dye, which, if I am not mistaken, you have been using for the last ten years.

Hush, Ned, do be prudent. I wouldn't have that secret known for the world. It would ruin my prospects.

How do you mean, father—I mean Mr.
Tarbox?

My hopes of marrying a rich wife, you dog—giving you a second mother. How would you like that?

I fancy I should be a very devoted son, if she were pretty, but if she is a scraggy old maid, you must excuse me.

A scraggy old maid? I blush for you, Ned. Do you have so poor an idea of my taste as to imagine I, your father—(well, never mind about that!) Do you think I would sacrifice myself to one of that class?

Not unless she was a female Cæsar.

Right, my dear Ned. You have hit the right nail on the head. I knew you would do me justice. However, Ned, as the subject has been introduced, we might as well discuss it further. To be frank with you, you are my chief embarrassment.

I? Now don't look so astonished. Of course you are. I don't mean to say you are not a very nice young man.

That's equivocal.

Well, then, very estimable, and all that sort of thing, but really I wish you were somebody else's son.

Thank you for the compliment.

Now don't get foolish, Ned. Hear me through. The fact is, as I intimated a little while ago, you are so confoundedly old that it naturally leads people to think I am a second Methuselah, which, of course, is very annoying. Now, if you were only eight or ten years old, for example—

I should be delighted to oblige you, and if you will only let me know how I am to bring myself back to that age, I will consent,
on the express condition, however, that I am to be spared the flogging attendant to that tender age.

Unfortunately, the plan is impracticable.

Is there any other way that I can oblige
you?

Yes, by forgetting for the next six months
that I am your father.

Am I to forget?

In that time we shall both have an opportunity to fall in with a suitable match at the watering places, and, by employing a proper degree of management, may both make our fortunes.

A bright idea, father. I beg your pardon;
I should have said Mr. Tarbox. Butas there is said to be some resemblance between us, it is essential that we should move in a different orbit.

Of course.

Well, of course one will go to Saratoga and the other to Newport. How shall we decide? Have you any preference?

None. It is quite immaterial.

Suppose we toss up a cent, and let that decide for us.

A cent! I never carry any of the vulgar coin about me. Say a gold piece.

So I would, but unluckily have none with me. Will you lend me one?

Really, I rather think I am out, just at present.

Then I believe we must take a cent, after
all. Which will you have—heads or tails?

Tails, Ned? I am shocked to hear you use such a vulgar expression. Say extremities.

Very well. Heads or extremities?

Heads, and by the way, let heads mean Newport.

Agreed. I will throw. There, I have lost, as I always do.

I go to Newport, then, said Mr. Tarbox, senior.

And I go to Saratoga, said Mr. Tarbox, junior.

And for six months, you will remember, I disown you as a son, and release you from all filial obligations, unless during that time I contract a fortunate alliance, after which I shall be happy to introduce you to your mother-in-law.

That is understood. Good bye, old boy.

Ned, I will thank you never on any occasion or in any connection, to speak of me as old.

Excuse me. I forgot myself.

To be sure. You see you're getting so confoundedly old yourself, Ned, and age and forgetfulness go together. Good bye and good luck! This day six months, at any rate, we'll meet here.

The widow Granger was in her element
at Saratoga. She never dressed younger, never was more gay and animated. She soon came to attract attention, and before long there was quite a strife for the notice of the lively young widow, as she was called.

Among these was Ned Tarbox, as we have hitherto called him, or, to speak more respectfully, Mr. Edward Tarbox. He was well made and good looking, and these go farther with a woman on the shady side of thirty than when younger.

After some skirmishing and a show of co-quetry, she acknowledged to Ned that she felt an interest in him. But, she continued,
there is a bar between us.

There is nothing that my love cannot surmount, said the young man, gallantly, pressing the widow's reluctant hand to his lips.

I am older than you.

A mere trifle. I am twenty-three.

And I, said the widow, with charming candor, am twenty-seven.

Twenty-seven! And shall a difference of four years separate us? Never!

But that is not all.

What is there more, charming widow?

I—I have a child.

Ned's fancy at once conjured up a child of three or four years of age.

Suffer me, he said with enthusiasm, to become its second father. Is it a girl or a boy?

A girl, murmured Mrs. Granger.

How old? inquired Ned.

This was an embarrassing question, but Mrs. Granger was prepared for it. She had a miniature of Mary, taken at the age of three years. This she displayed.

You must judge from this, she said.

It is a pretty face, said Ned. It is very much like yours.

Mrs. Granger tapped Edward with her fan, and called him a sad flatterer. Thereupon he kissed the miniature, and emboldened to a still more venturesome act, next proceeded to kiss the widow. She resisted so effectually that he did not succeed in kissing
her more than half-a-dozen times.

The same day, Ned sat down and indited
the following epistle to his father:

"MR. GEOFFREY TARBOX:—Dear Sir,—I address you thus formally in accordance with our compact, the terms of which you undoubtedly remember. As you will, I presume, be interested to hear of my welfare and success, I am happy to be able to inform you that I am on the eve of marriage with a wealthy young widow I first met here. You will do my taste the justice to believe that she is handsome and accomplished. She has been once the belle here, and I consider it no slight triumph that I have been able to carry her away from so many competitors.

She is to be sure, four years older than myself, and is the mother of a little girl of three years, who is her very image. There are no obstacles to love like mine. Indeed, I rather fancy the idea of becoming a step-father.
The marriage will take place a fortnight to-day. A month hence, I shall be at the Astor House, and should your arrangements permit, shall be glad to meet you there."

In reply, Edward received the following letter from his father, at Newport.

"Ned, you sly dog, so you have been captivated by a widow of twenty-seven, have you? Fie upon you! Have you no knowledge of the world? Catch me sacrificing myself in that way! With a daughter, too! Absolutely, I shall be a step-grandfather. But if you teach her to call me so, I will cut you off with a shilling. To be a step-grandfather is going a step farther than I agreed to. But, Ned, I have not been idle. I have ingratiated myself with a young girl of nineteen—none of your widows for me—and she has consented to be mine in a fortnight. Queer coincidence, isn't it that we should be married at nearly the same time, without any communication with each other? She is handsome, and what is quite as much to the purpose, rich. I accept your appointment, and will meet you a month
hence at the Astor. Au revoir."

We will suppose the weddings to be over.
I have always found that weddings are excessively stupid in the description, however interesting they may be to the parties.

Ned Tarbox and his new wife, whom the widow Granger, were the first to reach the hotel. Installing themselves in a comfortable room, Ned privately left word to have his father ushered up stairs as soon as he should arrive.

The door was at length opened, and Mr.
Tarbox, senior, entered.

There is another evasive reply: "Non mi ricordo!" And our own National motto is, "E Pluribus Unum." — Knickerbocker for September.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, April 9th, 1859.

"DON'T TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

TO READERS. The quality of the paper upon which the Patriot has been printed for several weeks does not agree with our wishes, and we expect to have next week a better article, as arrangements have been made to that effect.

FOREIGN TRAVEL. Among the passengers in the English Steamer, Niagara, which sailed from Boston on Wednesday last, was Joseph W. Morton, a young gentleman of much promise, son of William S. Morton, Esq., of this town. His object in going abroad is to see the wonders of the Old World, and make himself personally acquainted with those places and scenes made illustrious by the deeds and names of those which have been transmitted to us in the historic annals of Greece and Rome. Young Mr. Morton goes to Europe under particularly fortunate circumstances. He has been for some time past a student at the Pierce Academy in Middleborough; an institution of great merit and admirably conducted—where he had prepared himself to enter Harvard College. The principal of that Institution, is Professor J. W. P. Jenks, a gentleman of deep research and great learning—who has been desirous for some time past of taking a foreign tour, and with that view has been gathering information upon all those points which would enable him to pursue his travels with interest and advantage. Mr. Jenks offered to take a few young gentlemen, his pupils, with him—and among others, Mr. Morton, upon expressing a wish to go, was selected as one of the number. The party consists of six—Mr. Jenks and five young men, all students at Middleborough. Their names are James H. Bobbit of Taunton, C. A. Corl of New Bedford, W. E. Savory of Carver, W. H. Borden of Fall River, and Joseph W. Morton of Quincy. It is their purpose to visit Liverpool, London, Waterloo, Cracow, Vienna, Athens, Alexandria, the Pyramids, Naples, Rome, Florence, Venice, Milan, Strasburg, Paris, Oxford, Stratford-on-Avon, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Dublin, Cork, the Lakes of Killarney, and numerous other places, rich in scenes of classic interest and glowing in memories of departed years.

That the party may have a pleasant excursion and a safe return to their many friends, is our warmest wish; and we hope that during the absence of our young townsman, that our readers may be gratified by the perusal in the columns of the Patriot, of some of the interesting incidents of his European tour.

SONS OF TEMPERANCE. At a meeting of the "Quincy Stone Division, No. 73," held on Tuesday evening last, the following officers were installed:

N. Nash, W. P.; J. W. Lombard, W. A.; Ezra Damon, R. S.; William Parker, 3d, A. R. S.; E. H. Starbuck, P. S.; James F. Coe, T.; Joseph Hayden, C.; C. L. Baker, A. C.; John Parker, Jr., I. S.; Edward Damon, O. S.; George Starbuck, Chaplain.

CONNECTICUT. The result of the election in this State, is the re-election of the Republican candidate for Governor, a majority in both branches of the Legislature of the same political faith, and the election of four Republican Congressmen to two members of the last Congress were Democrats.

NATURALIZATION AMENDMENT. The following article of amendment of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts having been agreed to by the last and present General Courts, it will be submitted to the people for their ratification and adoption on Monday, the ninth day of May next: "No person shall be entitled to vote, or shall be eligible to office, unless he shall have resided within the jurisdiction of the United States for two years subsequent to his naturalization, and shall otherwise be qualified, according to the Constitution and laws of this Commonwealth; provided that this amendment shall not affect the rights of any person of foreign birth possessed at the time of the adoption thereof; and, provided further, that it shall not affect the rights of any child of a citizen of the United States, born during the temporary absence of the parent therefrom."

THE WASHINGTON HOMICIDE. The trial of Daniel E. Sickles, a Member of Congress, for the killing of Philip Barton Key, United States Attorney for the District of Columbia, on the 27th of February last, was commenced before the Criminal Court at Washington, on Monday last, Judge Crawford, presiding. It took three days to get a jury from a panel exceeding one hundred and fifty tlesmen, so many of them having formed an opinion generally favorable to the accused. The trial, at last accounts, was progressing, and will probably occupy two weeks.

CLAN CHOWDER. As usual, on this day and evening, "Yankee Seth," at Shaw's Saloon, will answer your orders.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, April 7, 1859.

The Sickles' Trial; probable acquittal.—Last to be a holiday—Adjournment of the Massachusetts Legislature—Political courtesy—Minority party highly complimented.—Acts of the Legislature—Veto from the Governor.

The Sickles' trial is in progress at Washington, and as you will discover by the public press, great interest is manifested in its proceedings. The belief is general, that he will be acquitted—perhaps before a speech is made on either side. The manner of the Traverse Jurors, who seemed, when challenged, all to be favorable to the prisoner, shows which way the current is setting. But we shall see.

It being Fast Day, (Thursday,) business is generally suspended, like Sunday. After all, it really is a holiday, and will be well improved by the sporting world. Divine service will be held in most of the churches; in some, on topics appropriate and peculiar to the day. The attendance probably will be small. In the evening, the theatres are told, will present peculiar attractions, and they will be doubtless well patronized.

The Massachusetts Legislature closed its Session about twelve o'clock last night, separating in peace and good will with one another, as the speeches made on the occasion plainly show.

A new era of courtesy and kindness, between political parties opposed to each other, has commenced in our Legislature the present term; I hope to be continued. The Republican party are largely in the majority in all branches of the Legislature—more than "large enough for all practical purposes." The remarks of Mr. Wells, (Republican) of Greenfield, on seconding the motion of Mr. Cushing, of Newburyport, in his vote of thanks to the Speaker, show how well, men widely differing in political matters, may move together in advancing any measure or creating any law, that may seem for the public welfare. Mr. Wells says:

"I know of no matter of public interest—I know no matter of public concern in which the dominant party of this House have not received the thorough, hearty and conscientious assistance of the members of the minority party in this House. Whatever success of legislation—whatever credit is gained by this Legislature, I desire to say here, is not due to the dominant party in the House; it is due to the Legislature of the House; it is due to the Democrats as well as to the Republicans. (Applause.) I think we may all agree that there is no man among us who will not feel that in thorough devotion to public duty and industry, and in point of acquisitions, the majority must yield to the minority party in the House, in all things publicly considered."

The Session has continued seventy-nine days, and there have been passed two hundred and seventy-three Acts—some of great importance—and one hundred and three Resolves. A large amount of business has been done, and many measures passed upon of particular interest. Last evening a numerous Committee was appointed by the Speaker to sit during the interim of the Legislature on the Revised Statutes. Mr. Morton, of Quincy, received the compliment of being placed on that "Working Committee," whose labors bid fair to occupy most of the approaching Summer Session.

The Act establishing the Superior Court has passed and received the signature of the Governor; and among others, an Act relating to Farmer's Clubs, relative to punishing fraud for the sale of adulterated milk, and to provide for sealing measures used in the sale of milk; to abolish the Criers of Courts; in relation to Back Bay and the Public Gardens in the city of Boston; concerning Faneuil Hall market; fixing the salaries of District Attorneys; relative to Coroners' and fine inquiries; in addition to an Act to change the organization of the Board of Overseers of Harvard University, with others.

At ten o'clock last night the Governor sent in his veto, on a Resolution concerning the compensation of the members of the Legislature for the extra Session and the Committee on the Revised Statutes. Very properly taking the ground, that it would be more appropriate, first to ascertain how many days will be occupied in completing their work, before compensation is made. It being impossible to conjecture now, the length of time the Legislature will be required to be together, to accomplish this revision of all our General Laws. The Governor was sustained in his views.

EXPRESS AND STABLE BUSINESS. The reader's attention is called to the Livery Stable and Boston Express advertisement, in to-day's columns. A sure guaranty is given to the public, in the well-known character of the proprietors, that every thing promised in connection with these branches of business, will be fulfilled in the largest sense.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT. A dance at Sons of Temperance Hall, Fast Day evening, was disturbed in an outrageous manner; and four of the party were yesterday brought before Justice J. Q. Adams—one was sent to jail for thirty days—two were fined, and the other was discharged.

Always keep a box of "MY MOTHER'S SALVE," by you, as it speedily cures cuts, sores, boils, piles, &c. It has no superior in the world. See advertisement.

Deaths.

To Chicago, Ill. Feb. 21, Willie H. Brackett, eldest child of H. C. and S. L. Brackett, formerly of Quincy, Mass., aged 2 years and 5 months.

Willie was a beautiful child, possessed of a most gentle and lovely disposition. He was the idol of his parents, and the angel of the household. He is an angel still, and his bright wings have only plumed for a higher flight to regions still more blessed.

Sweet cherub of the angel kind, Though dead, thou livest still; Thy body died, but not thy mind; That lives and ever will. Darling, wilt thou not come again, And bless me as before, Must we ever look in vain, With thou return no more. Yes, yes, papa and mamma dear, I'll come and bless you still. Keep watch at night, when stars are clear, And sing the whippoorwill. Look for me, when the stars have come, When gentle zephyrus blows, Willie will leave his spirit home, For childhood's place below. He will come, when soft and gentle sleep Has hushed his mamma's ear, And whisper then in tones so sweet, They'll not excite a fear. He will tell you of his spirit's range, Through all the ether blue, Though he saw, of sight so strange, Of things you never knew. He'll kiss and comfort those who mourn, And bid them have good cheer, Bind up the hearts that now are torn With grief for Willie dear.

BY virtue of a License of the Judge of Probate and Insolvency for the County of Plymouth, will be sold at Public Auction, on WEDNESDAY, the 20th of April, at 3 o'clock, P. M., on the premises, a certain one-half Acre of Land, situated in the Township of Quincy, in the Parish of Hingham, east of and adjoining the Farm, and belonging to the Estate of THAYER, deceased.

Said Land is advantageously situated, and near the sea shore. It has an front upon the street, giving it a prominent position in value, and a value for building purposes, and while from the variety and excellent soil, it is well adapted to all the purposes of agriculture, having been occupied for years for growing of and pasturing. To the Capitalist it offers an opportunity of a safe and Profitable Investment, a good percentage in annual returns, the same time from its location and situation advantages, it must have a permanent increase in value.

Should the weather be stormy, they take place the next fair day.

For further particulars inquire of C. W. BARNES, Administrator. Hingham, April 2, 1859. 3w

Land for Sale.

BY virtue of a License of the Court of Probate of Plymouth, will be sold at Public Auction,
on WEDNESDAY, the 2nd of APRIL, next,
at 3 o'clock, P. M., on the premises, about Thirteen and one-half Acres of Land, situated on the Hingham and Quincy Turnpike, in Hingham, east of and adjoining the Town Farm, and belonging to the Estate of JARVIS THAYER, deceased.

Said Land is advantageously situated in the vicinity of flourishing and growing villages, and near the sea shore. It has an extensive front upon the street, giving it a prospective value for building purposes rarely surpassed;
while from the variety and excellence of the soil, it is well adapted to all the purposes of agriculture, having been occupied for a number of years for mowing and pasturage.

To the Capitalist it offers an opportunity for a safe and profitable investment, yielding
a good percentage in annual returns; and at the same time from its location and surrounding advantages, it must have a steady and permanent increase in value.

Should the weather be stormy, the sale will take place the next fair day.

For further particulars enquire of C. BICKNELL, Administrator, or
C. W. SEAVOY, Auctioneer.

To the Honorable Judge of Probate and In-solveny, for the County of Norfolk.

THE Petition of Joseph A. Arnold, Administrator of the Goods and Estate of

SAMUEL FRENCH, 2d,
late of Braintree, in said County, Farmer, deceased, respectfully represents, that the said deceased had at the time of his death, Real Estate, consisting of his Homestead, being a House and other buildings, and about Fourteen Acres of Land
—about Eleven Acres of Fresh Meadows, near Braintree Great Pond—about Five Acres of Tillage Land, known as the "Rye Field,"—about Six Acres of Pasture Land, called "Great Swamp Hill,"—and about Six Acres of Woodland, near the house of Adam Freeman; all of said premises being and being in said Braintree, of the value of $3000, and that the said deceased, at the time of his death, was indebted to the said Samuel French, deceased, for just debts, including funeral expenses, amount to $1623 67, and that the charges of a administration are $100, making the whole claims $1728 63, and that the value of his Personal Estate is $—, being insufficient for the sum of $1728 63 to satisfy said claims; and that the persons interested in the Estate of the said deceased, as heirs or otherwise, are Eliza J.
French, Paul J. French, Edward M. French,
Amos A. Arnold, Charles A. Arnold and Enjamin French; two of whom are minors, and the said Amos A. and Charles A. Arnold, the said Administrator therefore prays that he may be licensed and empowered to sell and convey so much of the Real Estate of said deceased as will produce said sum of $1728 63.

JOSEPH A. ARNOLD, Adm.
Copy.—Attest, J. H. COBB, Reg.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.
Norfolk, ss. Probate Office, Mar 19, A. D. 1859.

UPON the petition of Joseph A. Arnold, Administrator of the Goods and Estate of

SAMUEL FRENCH, 2d,
late of Braintree, in said County, Farmer, deceased, praying that he may be licensed to sell and convey certain Real Estate of said Samuel French, 2d.

ORDERED.—That the said Joseph A. Arnold
do hereby present interested in the Estate of said Samuel French 2d to appear at a Court of Probate to be holden at Roxbury, in said County, on the Sixteenth day of April, A. D. 1859, at two o'clock in the afternoon, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said Petition should not be granted; by publishing an attested copy of said Petition, with this Order thereon, three weeks successively in the newspapers, called the Quincy Patriot, printed at Quincy, in said County of Norfolk.

Look at This.

MESSRS. BEAN & CLAYTON—
WOULD respectfully inform their customers
and the public generally, that by a few years of experience, we have come to the conclusion that the only true principle for Retail Clothing Dealers is to SELL FOR CASH—
which will enable the seller to sell for LESS profits, and the buyer will be more likely to get the money's worth.

Now to save our good customers from paying the debts of our bad ones, we take this opportunity to inform them and the public generally that on and after April 1, 1859, we shall sell

FOR CASH ONLY.

We hope this step we are about to take will meet the views of all our patrons and friends.

"Buy me and I'll do you Good."

Health and Strength secured by the use of the GREAT SPRING & SUMMER MEDICINE,
DR. LANGLEY'S

Root and Herb Bitters.
COMPOSED of Sarsaparilla, Wild Cherry, Yellow Dock, Prickly Ash, Thornoughwort, Rinsarh, Mandrake, Pandelion, etc., all of which are so compounded as to act in concert, and assist Nature in eradicating disease. The effect of this medicine is most wonderful, it acts directly upon the bowels and blood, by removing all obstructions from the internal organs, stimulating them into healthy action, renovating the fountains of life, purifying the blood, cleansing it from all impurities, and causing it to course anew through every part of the body; restoring the invalid to health and usefulness. They cure and eradicate from the system, Liver Complaint,
that man whet of so many diseases; Jaundice in its worst forms, all Bilious diseases
and Foul Stomach, Dyspepsia, Costiveness,
all kinds of Humors, Indigestion, Headache, Dizziness, Piles, Heartburn, Weakness, Pains
in the side and Bowels, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, and a torpid or diseased Liver, a disordered Stomach, or bad Blood, to which all are more or less subject in Spring and Summer.

More than 1,000,000 persons have been cured by this medicine. It is highly recommended by Physicians everywhere. Try it, and you will never regret it.

Only 25 cents for a pint, and 38 cents for a large Bottle. Sold by Dealers in Medicine everywhere.

Poetry.

Yankee Courtship.

A youth and maid, one winter night,
Were sitting in the corner;
His name, we're told, was Joshua White,
And hers was Patience Warner.

Not much the pretty maiden said,
Beside the young man sitting;
Her cheeks were flushed a rosy red,
Her eyes bent on her knitting.

Nor could he guess what thoughts of him
Were to her bosom flitting;
As her fair fingers, swift and slim,
Flew round and round the stocking.

While as for Joshua, bashful youth,
His words grew few and fewer;
Though all the time, to tell the truth,
His chair edged nearer to her.

Meantime her ball of yarn gave out,
She knit so fast and steady,
And he must give his aid, no doubt,
To get another ready.

He held the skein, of course the thread
Got tangled, snarled and twisted;
"Have Patience!" cried the artless maid,
To him who her assisted.

Good chance was this for tongue-tied churl
To shorten all palaver;
"Have Patience!" cried he, "dearest girl!
And may I really have her?"

The deed was done; no more, that night,
Clicked needles in the corner—
And she is Mrs. Joshua White
That once was Patience Warner.

To-Day and To-Morrow.

High hopes that burned like the stars sublime,
Go down the heavens of Freedom;
And true hearts perish in the time
We bitterest need them!

But never sit we down and say
There's nothing but sorrow;
We walk the wilderness to-day,
The promised land to-morrow.

Our birds of song are silent now,
There are no flowers blooming;
Yet life beats in the frozen bough,
And Freedom's spring is coming!

And Freedom's tide comes up a way,
Though we may stand in sorrow;
And our good barque, aground to-day,
Shall float again to-morrow.

Through all the long, dark nights of years,
The people's cry ascends,
And earth is wet with blood and tears;
But our meek suffering ends!

The few shall not forever sway,
The many will in sorrow;
The powers of earth are strong to-day,
But Heaven shall rule to-morrow.

Though hearts brood o'er the past, our eyes
With smiling faces gladden;
For lo! our days burst up the skies;
Lean out your souls and listen!

The world rolls Freedom's radiant way,
And ripples with her sorrow;
Keep hearts! who bear the cross to-day
Shall wear the crown to-morrow.

On, youth! flame earnest, still aspire,
With energies immortal;
To many a heaven of desire
Our yearning opens a portal!

And though age wears by the way,
And hearts break in the furrow,
We'll sow the golden grain to-day,
And harvest comes to-morrow.

Build up heroic lives, and all
Be like a sheaf of wheat;
Ready to flash out at God's call,
O, clasp of labor!

Triumph and toil are twins; and aye,
Joy runs the cloud of sorrow;
And 'tis the martyrdom to-day Brings victory to-morrow.

"Love, Honor and Obey" Promise to love!—Why, woman thinks
To love a privilege, not a task;
If thou wilt truly take my heart,
And keep it, this is all I ask.

Honor thee!—Yes, if thou wilt live
A life of truth and purity;
When I have seen thy worthiness,
I cannot choose but honor thee.

Obey!—When I have fully learned
Each want and wish to understand,
I'll learn the wisdom to obey,
If thou hast wisdom to command.

So, if I fail to live with thee
In duty, love and wisdom,
Thy nature's fault, or mine, or both:
The greater must control the less.

Anecdotes.

Ma, is aunty got bees in her mouth?
No; why do you ask such a question?
Cause that little man with a heap o' hair
on his face cooched hold o' her, and said he was going to take honey from her lips; and she said, Well, make haste.

Now, gentlemen, said a nobleman to his guests, on one occasion, as the ladies left the room, let us understand each other—we are to drink like men or like brutes?
The guests, somewhat indignant, exclaimed,
Like men, of course.

Then, replied he, we are going to get jolly drunk, for brutes never drink more than they want.

Pay your score, said a publican to a customer, who was running up an account for ale.
Wait till I've had the score first that last mug only made ten.

A prisoner in the dock, "once upon a time," burst into tears. "Why do you weep?" inquired the judge. "Ah, my lord,
it was not till I heard my council's defence
that I knew how innocent I was."

"I know I am a perfect bear in my manners," said a young farmer to his sweetheart.
"No, indeed, you are not, John, you never hugged me yet."

GRANULAR FUEL.

Patented, June, 1852.

Manufactured from Brushwood and Twigs

For kindling Coal Fires

AND all purposes for which a quick hot fire is needed. It is intended

By its Cheapness and Cleanliness

TO SUPERSEDE CHARCOAL.

It is especially adapted for Summer Use, when a quick fire is wanted but a short time. As it can be used in all kinds of Stoves, and being allowed to go out immediately after using, enables the consumer to practice Economy.

The extreme low price of this Fuel is also a great advantage, being but one-half the price of charcoal. It kindles quick, is clean and cheap, and will be sold and delivered at the following
low prices for cash:—

Under 25 bushels, 10 cents per bushel.

Sophie Lynn.

Men are never so awkward, never so ungrateful, never so disagreeable, as when they are making love. A friend is a luxury
—a husband ditto, I suppose; but that intermittent class of human beings denominated 'lovers' are terrible bores. It does very well for a woman to blush and look flustered
now and then, when occasion makes it desirable; but to see a man with his face as red
as a ripe cherry, and a real parcel of strong-mindedness, self-reliance, and masculine dignity, done up in broadcloth and starched linen, quaking from the toe of his boot to the top of his shirt-collar, his mouth awry
and his tongue twisted into convulsions, in the attempt to say something sweet—O, frantics!

So said saucy Sophie Lynn aloud to herself, as she sat swinging backwards and forwards before her window, in a luxurious arm-chair, and playing with a delicate ivory fan that lay upon her lap.

It always seems so strange, not to say tiresome, she continued, with a running, musical laugh, after one has waltzed and sung, quoted poetry and talked nonsense with anybody,
till one is puzzled to know which of the two
is most heartless, one's self or one's companion, to hear him come plump down on the subject of matrimony, as though that was the legitimate end of every such insipid acquaintance! For my part I never had a lover (there Sophie fluttered her fan and looked pleased, for she had had more than one) that I wasn't heartily sick of after he had proposed. There was Captain Morris—I thought him the handsomest man in my whole circle of acquaintances, until he went on his knees to me and swore he should die
if I didn't take pity on him. Somehow he always looked like a fright to me afterwards.
Then there was Dr. Wilkins—he was really agreeable, and people said very learned. I was delighted with him for a time; but he spoiled it all with that offer of his—what long-winded adjectives!—and how the poor fellow blushed, and puffed, and perspired!
He called me an 'adorable creature,' and hiccoughed in the middle of adorable. Horrors! I've detested him ever since. Then there was—

Here Sophie started. She heard the doorbell ring. With a nervous spring she stood before her mirror, smoothing down her brown hair with a hasty little comb.

It won't do to seem interested, she said, as she took a finishing survey of her person in the glass, and shook out, with her plump jewelled fingers, the folds of her airy muslin
dress.

The moment afterwards, when a servant entered to announce Mr. Harry Ainslee, she was back in her old seat by the windows rocking and playing with her fan, apparently as unconscious and listless as though that name had not sent a quicker thrill to her heart, or the betraying crimson all over her face. Tell him I will be down presently she said.

The girl disappeared, and Sophie flung open her window, that the cool fresh wind might fan away the extra rosiness from her complexion. Then she went to the mirror, and after composing her bright, eager, happy
face into an expression of demureness, descended to the parlor. A smile broke over her features, and she reached out both hands to her guest; but, as if suddenly recollecting herself, drew them back again, and with a formal bow of recognition, she passed him, and seated herself in a further corner of the room.

It was very evident that something was wrong with Sophie; that she had made up

her mind, either not to be pleased or not to please. Could it be that she had foreseen what was coming? that a presentiment of that visit and its result had dictated the merry speeches in her chamber? Be that as it may, a half hour had not elapsed before she knew that Harry Ainslee's hand and fortune, (which latter, by the way, was nothing wonderful) were in the same place where Captain Morris's and Dr. Wilkins's had been before them.

The first man that I ever heard say such things without making a fool of himself, muttered Sophie emphatically from behind her fan, as she sat blushing, and evidently gratified, yet without deigning any reply to the gallant, straightforward speech in which her lover had risked his all of hope.

He ought to do penance for the pretty way in which he manages his tongue. He's altogether too calm to suit me! And Sophie shook her curly head meaningfully, holding her fan before her for a screen—did she forget what she had been saying? I wonder if I could snore the way old Uncle Jones used to in church! she soliloquised. Wouldn't it be fun?—and wouldn't it plague Harry if he thought I had been asleep while he was talking!

Sophie's blue eyes danced with suppressed
merriment as she gave two or three heavy breathings, and followed them up with a masal explosion worthy of an orthodox deacon. It was well done—theatrical—done, and poor Harry sprang bolt upright—surprised, mortified, chagrined. Human nature could stand it no longer, and Sophie gave vent to her mirth in a burst of triumphant laughter.

You little witch—you mischief—you spirit of evil! exclaimed the relieved Harry,
as he sprang to her side and caught her by the arm with a grip that made her scream.
You deserve a shaking for your behavior!
Then, lowering his voice, he added, gravely,
Will you never have done tormenting me?
If you love me, can you not be generous enough to tell me so? and if you do not,
am I not, at least, worthy of a candid refusal?

Words sprang to Sophie's lips that would have done credit to her womanly nature; and made her lover's heart bound with rapture;
for the whole depths of her being were stirred, and drawn towards him as they never before had been to any man. But she could not quite give up her railway train. She would go one step farther from him ere she laid her hand in his, and told him he was dearer than all the world beside. So she checked the tender response that trembled on her tongue, and flung off his grasp
with a mocking gesture and a ringing laugh,
danced across the room to the piano.

She seated herself, she ran her fingers gracefully over the keys, and broke out in a wild, brilliant, defiant song, that made her listener's ears tingle as he stood watching her, and choking back the indignant words
that came crowding to his lips for utterance.

Sophie, listen to me! he said at length, as she paused from sheer exhaustion. Is it generous—is it just to trifle with me so?
to turn into ridicule the emotions of a heart
that offers you its most reverent affections?
I have loved you, because under this volatile, surface character of yours, I thought I saw truthfulness and simplicity, purity of soul,
and a warm current of tender, womanly feeling, that would bathe with blessings the whole life of him whose hand was fortunate enough to touch its secret springs. You are an heiress, and I only a poor student; but it is the reason why you treat my suit so scornfully, you are less than the noble being that I thought you.

Sophie's head was averted, and a suspicious moisture glistened in her eye as Harry ceased speaking! Ah! why is it that we sometimes hold our highest happiness so lightly—carrying it carelessly in our hands
as though it were but dross, and snatching it all upon an idle caprice!

When she turned her countenance towards him again, the same mocking light was in her eyes, the same coquettish smile
wreathed her red lips.

Speaking of heiresses, said Sophie, there's Helen Myrie, whose father is worth twice as much as mine. Perhaps you had better transfer your attentions to her, Mr. Ainslee.
The difference in our dowries would no doubt be quite an inducement, and possibly she might consider your case more seriously than I have done.

Like an insulted prince, Harry Ainslee
stood up before her—the hot, fiery, indignant blood dashing in a fierce torrent over his face—his arms crossed tightly upon his breast, as if to keep his heart from bursting with its uprising indignation—his lips compressed and his dark eyes flashing. Sophie, cruel Sophie! You added one drop too much to your cup of sarcasm. You trespassed upon his forbearance one little step further than you would have dared, had you known his proud, sensitive nature.

Not till he was gone—gone without a single word of expostulation, leaving only a grave 'good-by' and the memory of his pale face to plead for him—did the thoughtless girl wake to a realization of what she had done. Then a quick, terrible fear shot through her heart, and she would have given every curl on her brown head to have had him beside her one short moment longer.

Pshaw! what am I afraid of? He will be back again within twenty-four hours as im-portunate as ever, she muttered to herself
as the street door closed after him; yet a sigh, that was half a sob, followed the words, and could Harry have seen the beautiful pair of eyes that watched him so eger-ly as he went down the long street, or the bright face that leaned away out through the parted blinds, with such a wistful look after he had disappeared, it might have been his turn to triumph.

In spite of Sophie's prophecy, twenty-four hours did not bring back Harry. Days matured into weeks, and still he did not come.
nor in all that time did she see him. And now she began to think herself quite a martyr, and to act accordingly. In fact, she did as almost any heroine would have done under the circumstances—grew pale and interesting. Mamma began to suggest delicacies to tempt Sophie's palate—the poor, dear child was getting so thin! In vain. Sophie protested that she had no appetite.

In vain papa brought dainty gifts and piled up costly dresses before his pet. A faint smile or an abstracted 'thank you' was his only recompense. If Sister Kate suggested that Harry's absence was in any way connected with it, Sophie would shake her ringlety head with an air of supreme indifference, and go away and cry over it, hours at a time. Everybody thought something was the matter with Sophie, Sophie among the rest.

Her suspense and penitence became intolerable at last. Sister Kate, who had come so near to the true solution of the mystery, should know all—so said Sophie.
Perhaps she could advise her what to do, for
to give up Harry forever seemed every day more and more of an impossibility.

Will you come into the garden with me,
Kate? she asked in a trembling voice, of her sister, one day, about a month after her trouble with Harry, I have something of importance to tell you.

Go away, darling, and I will be with you in a few minutes, said Kate, casting a resolving glance at Sophie's flushed cheeks and swollen eyes.

Running swiftly along the garden paths as if from fear of pursuit, Sophie turned aside
into her favorite arbor, and flinging herself
down on the low seat, buried her head
among the green vines, and gave herself up to a paroxysm of passionate grief. Soon she heard steps approaching, and an arm was twined tenderly about her waist, and a warm hand laid caressingly on her drooped head.

Oh, Kate! Kate! she cried, in the agony of her repentance, I am perfectly wretched.
You don't know why, though you have come
very near guessing two or three times.
Harry and I—

Here a convulsive sob interrupted her,
and the hand upon her head passed over her disordered curls with a gentle, soothing motion.

Harry and I—another sob—quarrelled
two or three weeks ago. I was wilful and rude, just as it is natural for me to be, and he got angry. I don't think he is going to forgive me, for he hasn't been here since.

Sophie felt herself drawn in a closer embrace, and was sure sister Kate pitied her.
I wouldn't have owned it to anybody if it hadn't been just as it is, she continued, rubbing her little white hands into her eyes, but I think I love him almost as well as I do you and father and mother.

A kiss dropped on Sophie's curly head, and tighter was she held. She wondered that Kate was so silent, but still she kept her face hidden in the vines.

He asked me to be his wife, she continued,—asked me as nobody else ever did—in such a manly way, that he made me feel as though I ought to have been the one to plead instead of him. I could not bear that and so I answered him just as I should not. He thought it was because he was poor and I was rich, and all the time I was thinking I would rather live in a cottage with him than in the grandest place that ever was with any other man, only I was too proud to tell him
so to his face. What can I do? Tell me, Kate—you are so much better than I am, and never get into trouble. I am sure I shall die if you don't! And poor Sophie wept on.

Look up, dear, and I will tell you.
Sophie did look up, with a start, and the next moment with a little scream, leaped from the arms of—not sister Kate, but Harry Ainslee!

Sophie declares to this day that she has never forgiven either of them, though she has been Mrs. Henry Ainslee nearly two years.

Errors in Speaking Corrected.

Do not use vocation for vocation; the latter signifies occupation, employment, business; the former whatever withdraws or diverts us from that whatever.

It was impossible not to suspect the veracity of this story; it should be, truth of this story: veracity is applicable to persons only.
I had rather walk; it should be, I would rather walk: had denotes past possession,
not will or desire.

I doubt not but I shall be able; I doubt not that I shall be able.

He was too young to have felt his loss; it should be, to feel his loss.

I seldom or ever see him now; it should be, I seldom or never, or seldom if ever see him now.

Do not say, rather childish, rather sal-lial, as the termination ish and the word rather have the same meaning: such expressions,
though very common, are tautological.

I expected to have found him; it should be, I expected to find him.

I intended to have visited him; it should be, I intended to visit him.

I hoped you would have come; it should be, I hoped you would come.

I rode in a one-horse stage; it ought to be,
one-horse chaise; there is no such word as stage.

He can write better than me; say, than I.
When two things are compared, we must say, the elder of the two, not the eldest; the richer of the two, not the richest; my brother is taller than I, not the tallest.

Though who is applied to persons, and which to inanimate things, yet to distinguish one of two or more persons which must be used: Which is the happy man? not, who;
Which of these ladies?

The observation of the Sabbath is a duty;
it should be, the observance of the Sabbath:
observance means remarking or noticing;
observance, keeping or obeying.

A child of four years old; it should be, a child four years old, or, aged four years.
The negligence of this leaves us exposed;
it ought to be, the neglect of this, &c.:
negligence implies a habit, neglect expresses an act.

No man had ever less friends; it should be fewer; less refers to quantity.

Be that as it will; it should be, be that as it may.

The above discourse; it should be, the preceding discourse.

The then ministry; it should be, the ministry of that time.

All over the country; it should be, over all the country.

Provisions were plenty; say, plentiful.
I propose to visit them; it should be, I purpose to visit them.

I leave town in the latter end of July;
omit the word latter.

I should have very much liked to have seen him; it should be, to see him.

He plunged down into the water; omit the word down.

We must do this last of all; omit of all.
Where is it? says I to him; it should be,
said I to him.

Salutations among Different Nations.

The expressions used as salutations among different nations have something characteristic and interesting, even for the most casual observer.

In the East, some of these expressions
savor, in a more or less degree, of the Scriptures, and of the serene and patriarchal sentiments of the inhabitants. The salutation used by the Arab, Syrian, or Shaloon, means peace, and is found in the word Jerusalem.
The Arab salutes his friend thus, May you have a happy morning.

The Turks have a formula which can only be used in a sunny climate—May your shadow never be less.

The phrase of Egypt is feverish, and perspiration is necessary to health, hence the Egyptian, meeting you, asks, How do you perspire?

Have you eaten? Is your stomach in good order? asks the Chinaman, a touching solicitude which can only be appreciated by a nation of gourmands.

Good cheer, says the modern Greek, in nearly the same language in that the ancients were wont to greet their friends.

The Romans, who were robust, and laborious, had energetic salutations, expressing force and action: Salve—be strong, be healthy, and Quid facias?—What do you do? What make you?

The Genoese, of modern times, say—
Health and wealth, which is very appropriate for a commercial people.

The Neapolitan devoutly says, Grow in sanctity. The How stand you? of almost all Italy, forcibly indicates the nonchalance
of the sunny land.

The Spaniard, grave, haughty and indifferent, wishes you Good morning, to which we respond, At your service, sir.

The ordinary salutation of the German is,
How goes it? To bid one adieu, he says, Live quiet and happy. This last plainly indicates his love for the simple joys of life.

The travelling Hollander asks,—Hoe
waart's go?—How do you go? The thoughtful, active Swede demands, Of what do you think? while the Dane, more placid, uses
the German expression, Live well,—Live well. But the greeting of the Pole is—Best of all: Are you happy?

The English have the Good-bye, a corruption of the words God be with you, and some others, but that which exhibits best the character of the English is, How do you do?

The Comment vous portez vous? of the French, How do you carry yourself? is equally characteristic of the free and easy Frenchman.

The Game of Chess.

The Cincinnati Gazette contains some interesting reflections on the "Game of Chess," which is now attracting an unusual degree of attention,
and from its article we take the following extracts:

esting reflection on the "Game of Chess," which Chess is also a friend to some of the moral virtues. Patience, prudence and temperance are all commended in Chess. A man would have little chance in Chess, with a head giddy with wine or brandy, and almost as little who got out of patience and out of temper. It demands a mind cool, calm and temperate. It was Dr. Franklin,

we think, who said to the Chess players, "If you cannot get a victory over your adversary, get one over yourself."

Sunday in former Times.

The Puritan Sabbath in the villages of New England commenced on Saturday afternoon. No labor was performed on the evening which preceded the Lord's Day.
Early on Sunday morning the blowing of a horn in some places announced that the hour of worship was at hand. In other villages
a flag was hung out of the rude building occupied by the church. At Cambridge a drum was beaten in military style; at Salem
a bell indicated the opening of that settlement.

The public religious services usually commenced at nine o'clock in the morning, and occupied from six to eight hours, divided by an intermission of one hour for dinner. The people collected quite punctually, as the law compelled their attendance, and there was a heavy fine for any one who rode too fast to meeting. The sexton called upon the minister and escorted him to church in the same fashion that the sheriff now conduct the judge into our State Courts. There were no pews in the church, and the congregation had places assigned them upon the rude benches, at the annual town-meeting, according to their age, importance and social standing.
A person was fined if he occupied the seat of another. Our local histories reveal that pride, envy and jealousy were active passions among the men of olden times, and it was delicate and difficult business to "seat
the meeting house," as it was quaintly called.

Many of the early churches of New England had two clergymen; one, who was called the Pastor; the other the Teacher.
The congregations assembled at an early hour—never later than nine o'clock. After prayer, a chapter from the Bible was read by one of the ministers, and "expounded" at length. In many of the churches the Bible was not read at all, and it took years of agitation to carry the "innovation." A psalm in metre was next sung, which was dictated line by line, to the congregation; this service was usually performed by one of the deacons. The preacher did not take part in the introductory services. The baptisms, cases of church discipline and collections always took place in the afternoon. The "long" prayer usually occupied from an hour to an hour and a half, and many of the sermons of this period make from an hundred to an hundred and fifty pages.

There was a contribution every Sunday, preceded by an appeal from one of the deacons. The boxes were not carried round, but the congregation arose and proceeded to the deacon's seat, and deposited their offerings. The magistrates and "brief gentlemen" walked up first, the elders next, and then followed the common people; this ceremony occupied much time. Besides the money given, persons brought various useful articles and goods as offerings. The collections were distributed by the deacons to the ministers and the poor.

The trials of ecclesiastical offenders at the close of the services, often afforded much excitement and amusement; for some offences, a particular dress was worn, and the "confession" of the offender was heard with much interest. Oftentimes the public services were continued until after sunset. After the benediction, the ministers passed out of the church, bowing to the people on both sides of the aisle, as they all sat in silence until the clergyman and their families had gone out.

CONVICTION OF MRS. CROWLEY. The following unhappy particulars in relation to this unhappy woman, (whom it will be recollected was charged in March last, with taking the life of her infant child and secretly burying it in the woods at Milton,) have been kindly furnished us by Coroner Bass for publication.

Coroner's Inquest. The action, Commonwealth, vs. Joanna Crowley, of Boston, for criminal conduct relative to her infant child, having been disposed of, the following is a brief report of the case.

The infant was found in a wood lot in Milton, the 20th ultimo, and an inquest held; the verdict of the jury was, "That it came to its death within the period of three or four weeks by Joanna Crowley, of Boston, the probable mother of the child, by her violence or criminal neglect."

Mrs. Crowley was afterwards found by the Coroner in Boston, and informed that an infant had been found, which from evidence before the inquest, he thought was hers, she said it was not, but acknowledged she had an infant about four weeks since; and when asked where it was, she said she had buried it herself at South Boston; but finally admitted that the child found was hers; that as soon as she was able, she took it to Milton and buried it in a wood lot; offering as an apology, that her husband had been dead three years, and having several small children, she did not know how to support it.

At her trial before the Municipal Court, the woman who was present when the child was born, testified that it was born alive, and that its mother would not allow her to take the necessary care of it.

Complaint was first made at the Police Court, and sentence of one year to County Jail imposed, from which an appeal was taken to the Municipal Court, and a verdict of guilty found.

PAINTING. The birds are commencing to fill the air with their rich mellow music; the trees are beginning to decorate themselves with their bright green leaves, thus reminding our citizens that Spring is dawning, and that it is time to be a stirring—to paint and varnish their cottages, and thus make them appear as beautiful as the trees in their new spring dress. Still some may be at a loss to decide who will do it neatly, and for this reason we take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to two young, enterprising gentlemen, who were born and bred in our midst, and whose industrious sires before them has made many a domicile—from the President's mansion to the Alms-house—shine forth in elegance unequalled. These gentlemen—Messrs. Hayward—have started in business for themselves, and are unsurpassed, we think, by any in our midst, in the art of marbling, graining, etc. They can be found over Mr. Kimball's Cabinet Manufactory, on Hancock street.

CHANGES IN TRADE. We learn that our old friend, Mr. George H. Locke, who for eighteen years past has kept store at his well known stand on Copeland street, in the western part of this town, has retired from business on account of ill health, and is succeeded by Leona C. Bidger, a young gentleman favorably known to our citizens. We have reason to believe that Mr. Locke has acquired a handsome competency, the result of enterprise and diligence in nearly twenty years of labor; and we heartily wish success to Mr. Bidger, who takes his place with such encouraging prospects. He is worthy of public patronage.

THE SICKLES CASE. This trial is progressing, the prosecution having closed, but the defence will probably occupy ten or fifteen days as almost every point is strongly contested.

WORTH SEEING. The Dutton Children, the smallest of their age in the world, will visit us again according to their notice in today's paper. At their recent exhibition in this place, at least one thousand persons visited them; and the universal opinion was that they were the greatest prodigies of the age. They are really worth seeing.

BOWLING. On reference to our advertising columns it will be noticed that Charles Taylor, late of this town, has become proprietor of the old established bowling saloon, in Hanover street, Boston. The admirers of this pleasant and healthy exercise will find everything at friend Taylor's room, in apple order, where they can pass an hour in an agreeable manner with their friends.

Clam Chowder to day and evening at Shaw's saloon.

REDUCTION OF FARE. The Directors of the Old Colony Railroad have at last yielded to the importunities of the people by reducing the price of fare upon their road. It is a popular move; in keeping with the progress of the times, and will receive the hearty concurrence of the travelling community. Mr. Gay, the worthy depot master, is in extacies by the arrangement. His "New Ticket" he says, goes off like "hot cakes." Our "Boston Correspondent" alludes to the subject in an interesting and able article upon railroads to which we would call the especial attention of the reader.

SOUTH SHORE HERALD. This is the name given to a weekly sheet, recently started at Scituate, (Mass.) by Charles Young. It looks well, contains much local matter, and a good selection of miscellaneous reading. Success to the enterprise.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE. We have received, after an interval of several months, from the publishing house of Messrs. A. Williams & Co., of Boston, the March and April numbers of Harper's Magazine. The monthly receipt of so valuable a publication by the favor of friend Williams, would be appreciated by all.

WE take great pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the advertisement of our friend Wether's, 20 & 22 Hanover street, found in today's paper, and would advise them to cut out the same and when they are out (in search of a pretty Bonnet, or Millinery Goods of any kind,) to take it with them and give him a call. He has never before advertised, and were it not for the monstrous stock on hand, we should hardly be favored with this advertisement.

The New England Carpet Company of Boston are supplying the people with carpets at low prices. See their advertisement and scale of prices in our paper to-day.

Sailors, as well as all travelers, should always take with them a supply of "My Mother's Salve." It relieves pain, it heals wounds. It is highly recommended. See advertisement.

An abundant yield of all kinds of fruit—especially expected this year. In the western part of Virginia, vegetation is remarkably forward for the season, three weeks, at least, in advance of last year.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, April 14, 1859.

Business.—Money.—Old Colony Railroad; prosperous condition; good management. Political horoscope.—Speculations on the next Presidential election.

Spring business has not opened with those encouraging prospects that were held out last winter. A large number of buildings is in the process of erection, in and around Boston, as a matter of necessity, for our increasing population. But sales of real estate are made weekly to sacrificing prices for the seller; and speculators in lands and houses, have found it hazardous, and oftentimes bad business.

There seems to be an anomaly in our business sphere; for with general languor in the mercantile community, the money market is found amply supplied with capital at less than six per cent. for best notes and acceptances. Indeed, good paper continues scarce, and negotiations outside of the banks are beautifully small for April. Bank stocks are not much in demand with the dividends off, yet the prices keep up firm. Insurance stocks are quoted as very active, and go off like "hot cakes" at large prices. The rates of premium being such, that the stock offices are making more money than they have done for some years past. Another business feature, worthy of notice is, that for the year past less breadstuffs have been exported from the United States, than in any year since 1849. The week has passed without the shipment of a single bushel of wheat from New York to a foreign port. The question arises, why is good flour held at such prices, when there is such an abundance in the market? Let speculators in breadstuffs answer the question.

Railroad stock continues jubilant. The Old Colony and Fall River Railroad shares are scarce for buyers, and are considered the best stock of the kind in the market. In truth, the concern for some years past, has been extremely well managed by the Directors, many of whom are practically business men. Alexander Holmes, Esq., the President, is among the best of our railroad managers in New England. Remarkably attentive to all his duties; shrewd and sagacious in matters of business, he has done much to advance the best interests of the Old Colony Railroad Corporation. The stock is worth $102 1/2 per share, and is eagerly sought after by capitalists for investment. The debt, now less than $200,000 is due on bonds not yet at maturity. The Corporation would be glad to meet them, for payment, but the bondholders prefer to hold on their securities, until matured. The recent change in the tariff of fares meets with much popular favor. The price of a single passenger ticket to Neponset is now fifteen cents; to Milton Lower Mills eighteen cents; to Quincy twenty-five—and nearly in the same ratio from Boston to Fall River and Plymouth.—The season tickets remain in price as before; but it is not improbable they will be reduced. The arrangement for an hourly train from Boston to Quincy, seem not yet to have been completed. The matter is still under advisement, and if consummated, would add materially to the prosperity of the railroad.

The political concerns of the country remain quiet, but the combined opposition to Mr. Buchanan's administration, grows more formidable. In the next Congress, parties as to strength, will be nicely poised. The chances favorable to the Republican party. Even now, the six New England States, will be represented in the National Senate and House of Representatives as a unit; all Republicans. The Free States generally, will be represented by those opposed to the present administration; but the elections to come off, for members of the next Congress, being mostly in the Southern States, will be favorable to the Democratic party, who may be beaten but not annihilated. The Republicans to succeed, must be liberal advocates of all those elements in the political science of our country, called equal rights. On the long mooted question of "Domestic Slavery," they now stand where once the Democracy stood in their days of prosperity; that every State and Territory have a right to regulate the slavery institution as they please. Their views on the tariff question, also, are sound and popular, and are sustained by the President. It cannot be disguised as an important truth, that the vote of our naturalized citizens throughout the Union, is to have a permanent influence on the National election of 1860. A warfare on them as commenced in our own State on the question of suffrage, will lessen the chances of the opposition for success.

The Constitutional Amendment, requiring two years residence for naturalized citizens before they can vote, if adopted on the ninth of May next, (which I maintain is not a Republican measure) will form a strong element in the election of 1860. The Republican party, to be successful, should be the advocates of that same line of policy, pursued by our early Presidents, to those among us, naturalized American citizens, loyal to our Government and laws, but who first saw the light of heaven in other lands.

The total receipts into the Massachusetts Treasury last year were $2,435,158.32; payments, $2,148,437.81.

HUMORS OF THE HUMAN SYSTEM.
It is well known that the juices of the body are governed by natural laws, such as regulate the vegetable life in the change of seasons. In winter they are congealed, or in common parlance, the "sap is down." The pores are closed, and our whole body is hard and firm, and an accumulation of impurities takes place in our system.

The genial influences of Spring cause an expansion of all living matter, the sap rises in vegetable life, also the juices of our bodies are given out and enter into the common circulation. This is a law to which every human being is subject, and the neglect of it has caused a whole summer of misery.

Now is the time to apply a remedy that cleanses and searches every fibre and pore, and eradicates every particle and sediment of humor that has lain stagnant during the winter. Kennedy's Medical discovery is well known to our readers as the greatest and best Blood Purifier the world has ever produced.

We advise each and all of our readers to use a bottle of this Spring; we say one bottle, for that will cleanse the impurities of one season and prepare the system for the changes of the next.

Where the disease has fastened itself and become settled in the system, larger quantities are required.
For Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, White Scallies, Shingles, Pustules, Ulcerated Sore Legs, Humors in the Eyes, Running of the Ears from Scarlet Fever or Measles, the Medical Discovery can be relied upon to effect a perfect cure.

175 cents per yard for elegant WILTON Carpets, the usual price of which is $3 00 and upwards.

The above scale of prices we believe to be lower than the wholesale prices paid by dealers throughout the country.

Also, many choice styles of superior Velvet and Tapestry Carpets of English manufacture, which on account of their high cost are seldom imported to this country, were purchased at the recent auction sale in New York, and will be sold for the same prices of an ordinary article.

PAINTED FLOOR OIL CLOTHS, embracing the largest assortment to be found in the country, from 3 to 24 feet wide, will be sold at lower prices than ever.

Also—Buckings, Crumb Cloths, Stair Carpets, Feltings, Rugs, Mats, and all articles usually found in a first class warehouse.

As the name of our establishment has been closely connected by others in different parts of the city, it will be well for purchasers to mark the location of our warehouse.

Land for Sale.
BY virtue of a License from the Court of Probate and Insolvency for the County of Plymouth, will be sold at Public Auction, on WEDNESDAY, the 20th of APRIL next, at 3 o'clock, P. M., on the premises, about Thirteen and one-half Acres of Land, situated in the Hingham and Quincy Townships, in Hingham, east of and adjoining the Town Farm, and belonging to the Estate of JARVIS THAYER, deceased.
Said Land is advantageously situated in the vicinity of flourishing and growing villages, and near the sea shore. It has an extensive front upon the street, giving it a prospective value for building purposes rarely sold elsewhere, while from the variety and excellence of the soil, it is well adapted to all the purposes of agriculture, having been occupied for a number of years for mowing and pasture.
To the Capitalist it offers an opportunity for a safe and Profitable Investment, yielding a good percentage in annual returns; and at the same time from its location and surrounding advantages, it must have a steady and permanent increase in value.
Should the weather be stormy, the sale will take place the next fair day.
For further particulars inquire of
Q. BICKNELL, Administrator, or

Miscellaneous.

How we took a Boarder.

Our house is quite a large one, and besides those apartments which we occupy ourselves and those which we dedicate to our guests, there is a very nice little room on the second floor, which we never use and very seldom enter.

One morning, when I happened to feel in a very economical mood, I thought myself that, were this room furnished prettily, we might just as well not take a boarder; there were such numbers of advertisements in the papers for just such places. So many single ladies wished board in a "private family," where no other boarders were taken, and so many single gentlemen pined for the "comforts of a home," that I had no doubt we could suit ourselves exactly.

Accordingly I broached the subject to Psalter that very evening. Psalter only laughed at first, but when he found that I was in earnest, acquiesced in the arrangement, merely stipulating that neither maiden lady nor "gentleman and his wife," were to become inhabitants of the apartment. Consequently, my choice was limited. A single gentleman I must have, and I was determined to be very particular about him. I consider myself a pretty good judge of character, and I resolved to select an intellectual, moral, and well-mannered person, or to give up the idea altogether.

Tuesday and Wednesday passed without any answer. Thursday brought a young man belonging to a fire company, who stipulated that the members of his "machine" should be allowed the privilege of meeting in my parlor once a week, as their engine house was out of order, and that he always, in the morning, took brandy, instead of milk, in his coffee.

To this gentleman's proposal I was obliged to answer in the negative, and, on his pressing the point, to inform him that the reception of the engine company would of itself be an insuperable obstacle.

My next applicant was a maiden lady, who desired accommodation for herself, a parrot, a monkey, two poodles, a kitten, and a cabinet of mineralogical specimens. Of course she did not suit me, especially as she was very particular in her enquiries as to my servant girl's capability of wa-hing and attending upon poodles and parrots. Closely following upon her heels came a gentleman of respectable appearance and plausible address, with whom, in spite of a pair of very wild, singular eyes, which protruded beyond the lids until they appeared about to drop out upon his cheeks, I was mightily taken. In fact, the arrangements were nearly concluded, when, to my horror, I made the discovery that he was a professor of Spiritualism, and a speaking and singing medium; likewise my eyes were opened at once to the singularity of the gentleman's eyes by this confession, and I became aware that the nearest insane asylum would, in all probability, suit him far better than my humble dwelling. So with an inward thanksgiving for my rescue, I got out of the scrape as politely as possible, and the medium departed.

Then arrived three very untidy young men, who wanted to share the apartment, and receive scholars on the violinello therein. After those had departed, I declare, I was quite out of patience, and almost resolved to give up my notable idea altogether; but just as I had come to this resolution, I heard another ring at the bell. Such a ring! A loud, imperative, abrupt peal, but a modest, musical intonation, which betokened an unassuming and well-bred applicant for admission.

A young gentleman—so Biddy informed me; and, after peeping in the glass to see if my hair was smooth, I ran up stairs.

There was a young gentleman in the parlor; a tall, fair young man, with straight, straw-colored hair, combed back from his forehead, with a rush, and a white cravat of ministerial proportions. He had dear little hands encased in the most delicate of gloves, and so polite and gentlemanly, that, really, I thought to myself, I could not possibly find any one who would suit me better for a boarder.

He was on a visit to the city—so he said—and his principal object in the selection of a boarding place was privacy and good society. He was a church member, and kept very early hours. He was very fond of children, and would be happy, if I had any of those dear creatures, to instruct them in any little accomplishment, such as drawing or music, as an agreeable manner of passing his leisure hours. Altogether, he was a perfect model.

Fanny happening to run in just then, the young gentleman took her upon his knee, and they became friendly at once. So, somehow or other, it was all settled in a few moments, and Mr. Orlando Alberts had agreed to become the occupant of my apartment. After the business had been entirely settled, he began to chat with me and Fanny, and the other children, who had made their appearance; and while we were conversing, the hours passed by so quickly that it was dinner-time before I knew it, and Psalter and brother John coming home, they were introduced to our new boarder, and insisted upon his dining with us that very day. He accepted the invitation very sweetly, and said, that if we were willing, he should be most happy to enter his new quarters that very evening, and would send to the Astor House for his luggage the next day, as he was somewhat fatigued by his journey. To this proposition, we unanimously assented, and then all sat down to dinner, Mr. Alberts saying grace at its commencement, and, expressing, in the conversation which ensued, such excellent sentiments on all subjects, that we were absolutely charmed with him.

Very soon after the meal was finished, our boarder pleading fatigue, retired to his own apartment, and Psalter, John, and myself, a little later, set off for a concert, which we were very desirous of hearing, leaving the children in charge of Biddy, with instructions to put them to bed at nine o'clock precisely.

How do you like Mr. Alberts, my dear? I said to Psalter, as we walked along.

Tolerably, replied Psalter; he seems to be a very excellent young man; not particularly brilliant, but very worthy and well-mannered.

Well, it is better to be good than to be brilliant, is it not? I remarked.

But how do you know that Mr. Albert is not both? inquired John. There is a latent fire in his eye, a suppressed fervor in his voice, that tells me he is truly great. Of such men were martyrs made. Emma, did you notice how he said grace to night? It was actually grand.

That remark of his about the dignity of truth, was really fine, said Psalter. You may be right, after all, John.

And he is so kind to the children, and so very amiable, said I. I am sure we shall be delighted with him. And we walked together in the most amiable mood.

The concert over, we returned home, when, to our great surprise, we found the children still up, and in the parlor.

It is not my fault, said Biddy, when I spoke to her about it. The young gentleman got up after you was gone, and has been playin' 'em all the evnin'!

And he sent me out for candy for 'em; and then, when the fun was over, he read 'em a chapter, and bade 'em say their prayers, for all the world as if he was a minister.

Oh! said Fanny; he is so sweet.

They talked about Mr. Alberts all the time they were undressing, and their admiration confirmed me in my opinion. Children have such penetration!

The next morning we arose as usual, but Mr. Alberts did not make his appearance, and Biddy informed me that he had requested her not to arouse him if he should sleep late, as he never took breakfast, and was very much fatigued by his journey. So I cautioned the children to be quiet, and we sat down to the table without him. After breakfast, the gentlemen started for their places of business, and everything proceeded as usual till noon.

But still Mr. Alberts did not make his appearance, and I began to feel rather surprised.

It was about noon, when two men, stout and stalwart, and wrapped in huge great-coats, knocked at the basement door, and before any one had time to open it, stepped into the entry.

Beg your pardon, ma'am, said the first man; beg your pardon, but is there any gentleman by the name of Scraggin boarding here?

No, sir, I replied.

Nor any one named Phillips? inquired the man.

No, sir. Perhaps his name is Alberts, said the other, stepping forward.

There is a gentleman named Alberts at present in the house, I replied.

Ah! then you will be kind enough to ask him to step down a minute? said the first speaker.

Certainly: if you will walk into the parlor, I will call him, I said.

Accordingly the two men proceeded to the floor above, while I sent Biddy to summon Mr. Alberts. After a great deal of knocking, she returned with the information that she could not make him hear. And what is more, she continued, the window out onto the roof of the shed is open, and the curtains blowin' out of it, and it seems as though there was no one in it at all.

Take my word for it, that the room is empty—the bird has flown, said the first man.

We must unlock the door, and make sure, however, said the second.

I stood there in perfect astonishment as they pronounced these words, and placed at the same time two stars upon the bosom of their coats. What could it all mean? I thought.

You look surprised, ma'am, said the first policeman. I suppose this Mr. Alberts came the good, intellectual kind of body over you, didn't he? said his prayers, like a good boy, and all that, eh?

He certainly seemed to be a very good person, I replied. In fact, I see no reason to believe him otherwise.

No? replied the man. Jest look round and see if you miss anything. It is curious if you don't.

Miss anything.

Yes, ma'am. Have you counted your silver, or seen your jewelry this morning? said the man.

Oh! what a start the words gave me. I flew into the back parlor, for, be it known, that in certain drawers of the book-case I kept silver forks, my surplus money, and articles of jewelry. The drawers were closed. I tried them. The locks were broken and the contents gone; and Mr. Alberts—the amiable, virtuous, pious, Mr. Alberts—was the thief!

It was his particular forte—so the policeman told me—to impose himself upon persons who advertised for boarders, as a conscientious young man, and, after insinuating himself as deeply as possible into their confidence, to take French leave in company with their valuables. I discovered afterwards that during Biddy's absence to buy candy, Fanny had innocently revealed to him the contents of the book-case drawers, so that his task was rendered comparatively easy.

Oh! how I felt!—how provoked I was with myself! But, between you and I, it was a great consolation to know that we were all in the same box; although John, who expressed such an exalted opinion of the amiable Mr. Alberts, declared that he had not been deceived for one moment.

It was a still greater consolation to get our forks back again, however, and to receive the news that Mr. Alberts was a resident of Sing Sing, which we did in less than a fortnight.

P. S. I have come to the unalterable resolution never again to advertise for a single gentleman to board.

Curiosities of the Law.

A lady was coming out of the opera house, when a thief snatched at her diamond earring, and tore it completely from her ear, causing it to bleed. Upon her return home, she found the ring lying in the tresses of her hair. The man was tried for this ring, and being found guilty by the jury, the opinion of the judges were taken, whether this could be considered sufficient taking; the opinion of the judges were delivered, in which they held, that as the ring had been entirely removed from the lady's ear, and was wholly in the possession of the prisoner, although but for an instant of time, when he lost it in her hair, the taking was complete. So where a thief led a horse from one part of a field to another, intending to steal it, but was apprehended before he could get the horse out of the field, it was decided the taking was complete. In all these cases you will have noticed the principle upon which they were decided, is, that the property must be completely severed from the possession of the owner, and entirely within the possession of the taker, no matter, in each case, for how short a period of time.

One man put his hand into the pocket of another, seized his purse, and actually succeeded in taking it out of his pocket. However, the purse being tied by a piece of string to a bunch of keys which still remained in his pocket, the thief was unable to complete his object, and was arrested and tried for stealing the purse! but it was held that as the purse was still attached to the pocket of the owner by a string and keys, it was still in his possession, and the prisoner was entitled to be acquitted. So, where a thief went into a shop, took up some goods intending to steal them, but before he had removed them far from the spot on which they lay, discovered they were tied to the counter by a cord; upon being tried for stealing, it was held that the property never was completely severed from the possession of the owner, and he was acquitted.—Hand Book of English Criminal Law.

Icebergs.

Few sights in Nature are more imposing than that of the huge, solitary iceberg, as, regardless alike of wind and tide, it steers its course across the face of the deep, far away from land. Like one of the frost giants of Scandinavian mythology, it issues from the portals of the North, armed with great blocks of stone. Proudly it sails on. The waves that dash in foam against its sides, shake not the strength of its crystal walls, nor tarnish the sheen of its emerald caves. Sleet and snow, storm and tempest, are its congenial elements. Night falls around, and the stars are reflected tremulously from a thousand peaks, and from the green depths of "caverns measureless to man."

The visible portion of the iceberg is only about one-ninth part of the real bulk of the whole mass; so that if one be seen one hundred feet high, the lowest point may, perhaps, be away down eight hundred feet below the waves. Now it is easy to see that such a moving island will often grate across the summit and along the sides of submarine hills; and when the lower part of the berg is roughened over with earth stones, the surface of the rock over which it passes, will be torn up and dispersed, or smoothed and striated, while the boulders, unbedded in the ice, will be striated in turn.

But some icebergs have been seen rising three hundred feet over the sea; and these, if their submarine portions sunk to the maximum depth, must have reached the enormous total height of two thousand and seven hundred feet. By such a mass any rock or mountain top existing two thousand four hundred feet below the surface of the ocean, would be polished and grooved, and succeeding bergs, depositing mud and boulders upon it, this smoothed surface might be covered up and suffer no change until the ocean bed should be slowly upheaved to the light of day.

In this way submarine rock surfaces, at all depths, from the coast line down to two or three thousand feet, may be scratched and polished and eventually entombed in mud. It is upon this theory only that we are able to account for the many huge boulders that lay scattered about upon the mountain, valley and plain.

Never.

Never tip your beaver to a fine lady, and pass a poor widow without seeming to see her.

Never pass an aged man or woman, without making a reverential obeisance, unless your house is on fire.

Never break your neck to bow at all to a "sweet sixteen," with a flounced dress, who is ashamed of her old-fashioned mother: or to a strutting colporteur who is horrified at his grandmother's bad grammar.

Never keep a boy to black your boots and attend to the stable, while you frighten your wife out of the idea of keeping a nurse for the twins, by constantly talking of "hard times."

Never converse with a lady, with a cigar in your mouth, or smoke in anybody's company, without apologizing for the same.

Never remind people of personal deformity, or of the relatives who have disgraced them.

Never leave a letter unanswered, and use the stamp which was enclosed to you to "reply with," on a letter to your own sweetheart.

Never ride in a fine carriage and keep a score of servants, while your widowed sister trudges on foot, and toils for her daily bread.

Never wear a finer coat than the merchant you owe for it, or the tailor whom you have not paid for the making.

Never turn a deaf ear to a woman in distress, because you cannot see how you would be the gainer by her bettered condition.

Never wound wantonly the sensitive nature of the constitutional invalid; nor by rude jests and sarcasms, send a blush to the temples of modest merit.

Never jest with a single woman about the anxiety of all women to be married; nor tell your wife you married her because you pined for her lonely condition.

Never go to bed at ten, leaving your wife up till two, with a sick baby; and look pitchforks at her at the breakfast table, because that meal is half an hour too late.

Never hear ungracious structures upon the conduct of a woman, with a quiet smile, instead of saying in thunder tones, It is false, sir.

Never fall back from a bargain after the articles of agreement are drawn up, and only need your signature to make them perfect.

Never insult the modest by ribaldry, the grave by levity, nor the pious by contempt of sacred things.

Pigs and their Abodes.

It has been said that "wholesale pork-eating is wholesale depravity, and that "they who raise fat hogs and eat them will become hogs. About this, we have doubts; but this we do believe, that there ought to be a more cleanly fashion of keeping hogs, if they are to be eaten, and that less pork should be eaten by certain people.

When a hog is killed, the owner and his family generally are obliged, from the abundant supply, to luxuriate on fried liver, spare rib, steaks, scraps, pickled feet, and hogs head cheese for fourteen days. The dwelling smells of fried pork, and the garments of the occupants bear the odor into car and school room. In the end, they all become pretty well united in the opinion that it is unhealthy to eat nothing but pork, and complain of queer sensations, blurred eye sight, and manifest blurred perceptive faculties and indifference; and who wonders?

A man who chops trees in the woods, drink cider, saws wood, shovels gravel or loads a six horse team and drives it, may generally eat pork with impunity for a time; but he who follows sedentary pursuits, adds up long columns of figures at a desk in a warm room; writes sermons, or is confined to hot in doors by his business, better allay his hunger or recuperate his exhausted system with mutton and beef, or on the flesh of animals which roam the pastures, chew the cud, and lead less filthy, less confined lives, than hogs.

In most instances in this country, we think the hog dwelling in the foulest and filthiest quarter of the owner's premises; his mouth down to the eyes in the black mire, and breathing an atmosphere deathly to the lungs of man or beast; and if there is a dead or filthy thing or compound, or accumulation of dirt on the premises, it is the fashion to collect it and dump it into the hog pen for the grunting occupant to analyze.

Nature, it can easily be seen, has taught the hog habits of cleanliness, but man forces him into dirty habits by making his pen a slough. No animal is more delighted with a clean place or with clean straw than a hog. No animal takes more pains to make up his bed nicely than a hog, when he has clean material to make a bed with. No animal will take more pains to keep a clean place out of the mire for himself than a hog; but in most cases, the poor beast is obliged to sleep in liquid nastiness from the commencement to the end of his brief career.

Hogs have lungs, stomachs and pores, and what is more, internally, it is said, of all animals, they resemble the human race the nearest in construction. They have lungs, and their lungs are liable to become tainted and tuberculous by foul air and damp pens. They are cribbed, confined, compelled to wallow in filth, exposed indiscriminately to all sorts of weather; now sufficed—now starved; this day receiving frozen food; the next scalding hot; who can wonder at the reputed unhealthiness of pork, and the diseases which begin to appear more and more prevalent among them; fever, diseased lungs, tumors, measles, murrain, mange, staggers, swelling of the spleen, surfeit, lethargy, quinsy and catarrh.

The real facts are, thousands of hogs slaughtered and brought to the markets had diseased lungs and other diseases, the result of the constant contact with the execrable nastiness of their homesteads.

Hogs require to be kept dry and warm or they degenerate. They must not suffer extremes of heat or cold. Take care of them and they will thrive and make good pork. The pen should be in some well sheltered spot, with a south or west exposure, if possible, and well ventilated. The treatment of hogs is generally infamous.

With what pleasures most have heard the thankful grunt of the hog when a bundle of clean dry straw has been thrown into his neglected sleeping place. How he will work it over and wisp it up. How careful he is to keep it clean, and in the corner that suits him, and how careful to prevent it from being scattered about. How loath he is to leave it for the filthy spot. How he will tuck it up and nestle down into it, uttering grunts of satisfaction and gratitude all the while, positively pleasurable to the human ear. It is the acme of his ambition, his highest happiness to be thus favored with clean material for his bed. He should always have it.

We argue that the hog from the very satisfaction he expresses on receiving clean straw, is inclined to cleanliness and not to filth; but the hog is an animal, unlike man, having no "supremacy over his accidents." He is outrageously dirty because he is obliged to be. We contend that no animal will take better care of himself or keep himself cleaner when he is permitted so to do.

We are not ashamed to urge the cause of the poor hog, and the amelioration of his condition, for, in thus doing, we know we are doing that which is of much importance to the well being of those of the human race fond of pork.

Pork cannot be what it should be and fit for consumption, which was packed for months while alive in the sloughs of collected and constantly agitated filth. It is impossible.

In all this, we do not wish to be understood as in favor of much pork eating. Pork is difficult of digestion, but less so when pickled. The fat is so intimately mixed with the lean, and the tissue between the fibres contains so much of it, that it is utterly impossible to separate one from the other; and a man must have unimpaired powers of digestion, and a stomach that is not easily irritated, to render it nourishing and wholesome. So say those acquainted with the matter.

We appeal to the lovers of pork to give their attention briefly to the consideration of the condition of the poor pig, and the infamous treatment he is receiving.—Waltham Massachusetts Sentinel.

The Ostrich.

The cry of the Ostrich so greatly resembles that of a lion, as occasionally to deceive even the natives. It is usually heard early in the morning, and, at times, also at night. The strength of the Ostrich is enormous. A single blow from its gigantic foot, it always strikes forward) is sufficient to prostrate, nay, to kill, many beasts of prey, such as the hyena, the panther, the wild dog, the jackal, and others. The Ostrich is exceedingly swift of foot, under ordinary circumstances, outrunning a fleet horse. "What time she lifteth herself on high, she scorneth the horse and his rider." On special occasions, and for a short distance, its speed is truly marvellous; perhaps not much less than a mile in half a minute. Its feet appear hardly to touch the ground, and the length between each stride is not infrequently twelve to fourteen feet. Indeed, if we are to credit the testimony of those who have witnessed the fact in Senegal, such is the rapidity and muscular power of the Ostrich, that, even with two men mounted on his back, he will outstrip an English horse in speed! The Ostrich, moreover, is long-winded, if we may use the expression; so that it is a work of time to exhaust the bird. The food of the Ostrich, in its wild state, consists of seeds, ope and buds of various shrubs, and other plants, but it is difficult to conceive how it can manage to live at all; for one not unfrequently meets with it in regions apparently destitute of vegetation of any kind.

A good Joke on a Widower.

A widower, of a somewhat gallant disposition, had been accustomed to visit the residence of a widow, whether to see the widow herself or her lively daughters, our informant did not know. One evening he found the family party hard at work on some articles of cloth. The girls were sewing and the widow was pressing the seams. The widower hung up his hat, as usual, and took his seat by the fire. Just at that moment it happened that the widow had done with the pressing iron (vulgo—a tailor's goose.) She set it down on the hearth and called to her negro man, "Jake, come take out this goose." The widower started up with astonishment, not knowing what to make of this abrupt order. "Jake, do you hear me?" again exclaimed the widow. "I beg your pardon, Mrs. —," said the widower, with visible agitation, "but don't call Jake; if you wish me to leave your house, I will go at once, and without the interference of servants." The ladies smiled quite audibly, and it took some moments to explain to the chagrined widower his mistake. He has not been known to visit the widow since that evening.

The Picture of Life.

In youth we seem to climb up a hill, on whose top eternal sunshine appears to rest. How eagerly we pant to gain its summit. But when we have gained it how different does the prospect appear on the other side. We sigh as we contemplate the waste before us; and look back with a wistful eye upon the flowery path we have passed, but may never more retrace. Life is like a portentous cloud fraught with thunder, storm and rain; but religion, like those streaming rays of sunshine, will clothe it with light as with a garment, and fringe its shadowy skirts with gold.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECRET WE."

QUINCY MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY. At the annual meeting of this Company, the following Directors were chosen: William S. Morton, Israel W. Munroe, Thomas C. Webb, Whitcomb Porter, Stephen Bates, William B. Duggan, Thomas Curtis, R. B. Leuchars, of Quincy; Alfred Loring, of South Hingham; Apollon Randall, of Braintree; George Marston, of Barnstable; H. W. Blanchard, of Dorchester; Sumner A. Hayward, of North Bridgewater; Royal W. Turner, of Randolph; Solomon J. Beal, of Cohasset; Charles Brock, of Milton; Jonathan H. Cobb, of Dedham; Ebenezer Gay, of Hingham.

At a subsequent meeting of the Directors, William S. Morton was chosen President, I. W. Munroe Treasurer, and Stephen Bates, Secretary.

THE NEW SUPERIOR COURT BILL. An important change will soon take place in our inferior courts. By a recent act of the Legislature, the old time honored Court of Common Pleas is abolished, as is also the Superior Court of Suffolk County, and in place of these there is to be a new Superior Court with ten judges. It is thought that this reorganization of our courts will simplify much of the machinery of litigation, and prevent the almost endless delay now frequently experienced in the administration of justice. The act making these changes is long, technical, and, to any one but a lawyer, tedious.

THE NEW LAW CONCERNING MILK. The last Legislature passed an Act to punish fraud by the sale of adulterated milk, and to provide for the sealing of measures used in the sale of milk. The law provides for the appointment of one or more inspectors of milk in the several cities and towns, who shall prosecute all violations of law in the sale of the article; it gives the inspectors power to enter all places, at their discretion, where milk is stored or kept for sale, to take specimens of the same, and cause them to be properly tested; the result of which they are to preserve as evidence against the parties complained of. They are to keep an office and books, for the purpose of recording the names and places of business of all persons engaged in the sale of milk, and it is made unlawful for any person to sell milk without his name and place of business recorded.

Inspectors upon their appointment, are to take an oath of fidelity, and to give public notice of their appointment. The compensation is to be determined by a Board of Aldermen or Board of Selectmen. The fourth and fifth section of the law are as follows:

SECT. 4. "Milk shall be bought and sold by wine measure. All persons engaged in the sale of milk shall annually, in the month of May, caused to be sealed by the Sealer of weights and measures, in their respective cities and towns, all vessels used by them in the sale or buying at wholesale of milk, by wine measure; and all cans used in the sale of milk shall be sealed by said Sealer of weights and measures, at a price not exceeding two cents each, at the amount which they severally hold by wine measure; and any person who shall fail to comply with the provisions of the law requiring all measures to be sealed, or shall buy or sell at whole sale milk by any other measures than wine measure; or shall sell adulterated or unwholesome milk, shall be held guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon a conviction thereof by a court of jurisdiction, shall forfeit to the use of the complainant a sum not exceeding twenty dollars.

SECT. 5. "No person shall offer for sale in this Commonwealth, milk produced from cows fed upon the refuse of breweries or distilleries, or any other substance which may be deleterious to the quality of the milk, under a penalty of ten dollars for each offence."

REGULATING THE MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF BREAD. The following Act was passed by the last Legislature and became a law on the 5th of April, when it received the signature of the Governor:

SECT. 1. "A loaf of bread shall be two pounds in weight; and bread may be baked and sold in loaves, half, three-quarter, and quarter loaves; but not otherwise, except in bread composed in chief part of rye or maize.

SECT. 2. "Small rolls and fancy bread weighing less than one quarter of a pound each, may be baked and sold without regard to weight.

SECT. 3. "In every shop or place where bread is sold by retail, and in each front window thereof, there shall be conspicuously placed a card on which shall be legibly printed a list of the different kinds and qualities of loaves sold there, with the price of each per loaf, and half, three-quarter, and quarter loaf.

SECT. 4. "All bread, except small rolls and fancy bread of less than a quarter of a pound each, sold in any shop or place, shall be weighed in the presence of the buyer, and if found deficient in weight, bread shall be added to make up the weight required by law.

SECT. 5. "Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this Act, shall forfeit for each offence, the sum of ten dollars, to be recovered in an action of debt, to the use of the party suing therefor."

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, April 22, 1859.

Important news from abroad.—Europe.—California—Sickie's Trial.—Business in Boston.—Oration to Hon. Carl Schurz.—Constitutional Amendment.—Its effects on the Republicans as a National party.—Opinions of the Boston Press.

The news of the week from abroad is unusually interesting. It is said the venerable Baron Humboldt, confidential adviser of the Prince Regent of Prussia, has written to America, that European war cannot be postponed beyond July. The difficulty appears to be between France and Austria; involving other powers—more particularly Italy. At all events, war in Europe would give a most favorable aspect to American commerce, and materially change our business for the better. The warlike news from the Continent has produced great excitement in England; and though Parliament is dissolved, the English Ministry do not resign. The latest advices from Vienna, say, that a crisis is at hand; and great bodies of Austrian troops are on the move for Italy—the real anticipated seat of war. France is roused and making great military preparations.—Thus every thing in Europe is in a state of fusion.

Intelligence from California to the 28th ult., is highly important. A bill has passed the California Legislature to divide the State; thus adding one more state to the Union. A Convention of Delegates from California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, is called, to consider a plan for the construction of the Pacific railroad. Business, however, was dull at San Francisco and the markets unchanged.

The Sickie's trial at Washington is still progressing, and the interest in its proceedings unabating. The worst feature to be apprehended in the case by the defence is, that the jury may not agree. His acquittal is more probable.

Since my last, a slight re-action in business is manifest, especially in mechanical pursuits. Good mechanics can now find employment at fair wages. Glad of it.

A Republican gathering was held in Faneuil Hall on Monday evening last, as an ovation to Hon. Carl Schurz of Wisconsin. General Wilson presided at the meeting; it is admitted on all sides that Mr. Schurz's speech was able and very eloquent. The object of the meeting, was supposed to be, an expression of opposition to the proposed Amendment of our Constitution, to be acted upon the 11th of May next; requiring two years residence here of naturalized citizens before they can vote. But no direct action was made on the subject. He urged the practice of the same liberal course to be pursued by the Republican party of Massachusetts, as is practised by that party in the Western States. The inference to be drawn from the tenor of his remarks was, that the adoption of this Amendment, would be disastrous to the Republicans, in the national election to come off next year.

The public press here, is by no means harmonious on the important question. The Bee advocates the adoption of the Amendment. The Daily Advertiser is rather uncommitted; while the Traveller has some strong articles against it. One of these communications which appeared in that paper yesterday, argues that the late elections in Pennsylvania, the North-west, in Missouri and Connecticut, have shown that the great body of our foreign fellow citizens have abandoned Mr. Buchanan's administration, and are now actually engaged in reducing its strength as a national organization. In Pennsylvania the German vote given to the opposition has overthrown the Democracy in its strong hold. A majority of our foreign voters are intelligent, lovers of our free institutions; thoroughly imbued with American ideas; good citizens, and well worthy to vote side by side with those born upon our soil. The Amendment if adopted, will have an opposite effect from what it is intended; its only effect will be to combine yet more closely all the factions of the foreign vote in opposition to the party responsible for the measure. Again, it is argued by a writer of one of the Boston newspapers, that its adoption will come in direct conflict with the Constitution of the United States, which expressly declares, that all citizens of the United States shall have equal rights in all other states. Its ratification would lead to extensive litigation, which will finally terminate in the Supreme Federal Court, by a decision that Massachusetts has no right to make a distinction between native born and naturalized citizens. This is a grave view of the subject.

BAD LIQUORS. The Baltimore Grand Jury, in a formal presentation, have expressed the opinion that the murders and other acts of violence, so frequently perpetrated in that vicinity, may be attributed to the quality as well as the quantity of liquor drunk by the offenders.

"Mr. Mother's Salve" costs only twenty five cents, yet it will save a great many dollars in doctor's bills. Running sores, boils, burns, eczema, piles and chapped hands, receive immediate relief and permanent cure from the use of it. See advertisement.

TRADE AT HOME. Only a few years ago it was the general custom, and even now to some extent, for our citizens when in want of a large supply of West India or Dry Goods, to go to Boston for them, as a much better article could be obtained at less price; but the time has come when our people should patronize home industry, and buy their merchandise of their next door neighbor, instead of going abroad; for our merchants have just as good a variety as can be found in any store in the city, and are not one-half as likely to cheat you as strangers.

But we would more particularly call the attention of the readers at the present time to Paper Hangings. We presume there is no town, nor never was of an equal population, that has had offered to them such an extensive assortment as our dealers now present to their customers. At least we never examined a more rich and splendid collection than that kept by C. Gill & Co.; and as to cheapness, we will quote a remark made by a Boston paper-hanger, who was informed that the paper he was pasting, which came from the above-named firm, only cost thirty-seven and a half cents per roll. "Thirty-seven and a half! There must be a mistake, for I have papered many a room with sixty-two and seventy-five cent paper, that was not any better than this."

JUDGE OF THE SUPREME COURT. Hon. Eben. Rockwood Hoar, formerly a Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and who has just been appointed to the seat upon the Supreme bench made vacant by the resignation of Judge Thomas, has been formally inducted into office in Boston, by the reading of his commission in open Court. He has commenced his first Term at Taunton.

REAL ESTATE SALE. Attention is called to the auction sale of that well-known estate, now owned by Peter Hardwick, which takes place next Thursday afternoon. It is a pleasant and desirable situation, and one of the most valuable in the town. See advertisement.

THE SICKIE'S CASE. This trial is still progressing in Washington city. There may, says our "Boston Correspondent," new difficulties arise to retard its progress and early disposition. His surmises are not improbable; which, with other interesting matters contained in his article of to-day, will richly pay a perusal.

GENERAL F. A. KINGSBURY. This gentleman, who keeps "Bachelor's Hall," in his office, at Weymouth Landing, was missed for two days, and his friends thought it advisable to forcibly enter, when he was found upon the floor unable to move. It seems that he had a paralytic shock, and had lain there forty-eight hours, and would probably have died in a short time, had he not been found. He is now comfortable.

AN ELEGANT DENTAL ESTABLISHMENT. If our readers would obtain an idea of the great extent of business in the Dental profession, in this city, we advise them to visit the extensive rooms of Drs. Cummings & Flagg, No. 25 Tremont street, embracing seven apartments devoted expressly to dental practice. Having just refitted and refurbished the rooms, they now present the most elegant and tasteful appearance, surpassing in extent, comfort and convenience, any similar establishment in the country. The beautiful specimens of artificial teeth, single, whole sets, and parts of sets, attract especial attention, and challenge the admiration, not more of the general observer than the strictly scientific, who can fully appreciate their perfect accuracy and beauty. We have often seen commendatory notices of their work, but have never observed the least exaggeration, and not one statement in reference to its excellence which we would not cheerfully endorse from personal knowledge. The Medals and Diplomas awarded at various times, alone place them at the head of their profession; but to appreciate the skill and superior workmanship of the very gentlemanly conductors of this extensive establishment, the public should call and examine for themselves. We are sure that as their work challenges the admiration of all, so their dental operations are most efficient and skillful.—Boston Traveller, April 13.

THE NEW ENGLAND CARPET COMPANY of Boston are supplying the people with Carpets at low prices. See their advertisement and scale of prices in our paper to-day.

GREAT ATTRACTION. The Dutton children exhibit this day and evening. They are indeed curiosities, and worth seeing. See advertisement.

HUMORS OF THE HUMAN SYSTEM. It is well known that the juices of the body are governed by natural laws such as regulate the vegetable life in the change of seasons. In winter they are congealed, or in common parlance, the "sap is down." The pores are closed, and our whole body is hard and firm, and an accumulation of impurities takes place in our system.

The genial influences of Spring cause an expansion of all living matter, the sap rises in vegetable life, also the juices of our bodies are given out and enter into the common circulation.

This is a law to which every human being is subject, and the neglect of it has caused a whole summer of misery.

To the Honorable George White, Judge of Probate and Insolvency, for the County of Norfolk.

RESPECTFULLY represents, Aaron Pratt, Administrator of the Goods and Estate of

late of Cohasset, in said County, Wheelwright, deceased, that among the assets of said Estate is a note of 788 1/2, given to said Waters by James Harker, dated Hingham, September 30, 1856, and payable in five years, with interest annually, which is secured by a mortgage of two parcels of Land in Hingham, of the County of Norfolk, to wit: the one parcel containing about thirteen acres with a dwelling house thereon, and the other containing about eight acres; that all other debts due the said Estate have been already collected, or can be easily collected by said Administrator, and that the existence of said outstanding mortgage debt is the only obstacle in the way of a prompt and final settlement of said Estate; and that to defer said final settlement till said mortgage note falls due, will occasion inconvenient delay; therefore he prays that he may be allowed to sell and assign the said note and mortgage, in such manner as he may deem to be the best advantage of said Estate agreeably to Chapter 126 of the Statutes of 1851.

175 cents per yard for elegant WHITON Carpets, the actual price of which is $3 00 and upwards.

The above scale of prices we believe to be lower than the wholesale prices paid by dealers

throughout the country.

Also, many choice styles of superior Velvet

and Tapestry Carpets of English manufacture,

which on account of their high cost are seldom imported to this country, were purchased at the recent auction sales in New York, and will be sold for the same prices of an ordinary article.

ALSO

PAINTED FLOOR OIL CLOTHS,

embracing the largest assortment to be found in the country, from 3 to 24 feet wide, will be sold at lower prices than ever.

Also—Bookings, Crumb Cloths, Stair Carpets,

Felings, Rug Mats, and all articles usually found in a first class warehouse.

As the name of our establishment has been closely imitated by others in different parts of the city, it will be well for purchasers to mark

the location of our warehouse.

Look at This.

MESSRS. BEAN & CLAYTON

WOULD respectfully inform their customers

and the public generally, that by a few years of sad experience, we have come to the conclusion that the only true principle for Retail

Poetry.

An Old Poem.

Who shall judge a man from manner?
Who shall know him by his dress?
Pompers may be fit for Princes,
Princes fit for something less;
Crumbled shirt and dirty jacket
May beseech the golden ore
Of the deepest thoughts and feelings,
Satin vests could do no more.
There are sparks of crystal nectar
Ever welling out of stone;
There are purple buds and golden,
Hidden crushed and overgrown.
God, who counts by souls not dresses;
Loves and prospers you and me,
While he values thrones, the highest
But as pebbles in the sea.

Man praised above his fellows,
Of a nation's wealth or fame;
Titled laziness is pensioned,
Fed and fattened on the same;
By the sweat of other's forehead,
Living only to enjoy the day,
While the poor man's outraged freedom
Vainly lifts up its voice;
Truth and justice are eternal,
Born of love and light;
Secret wrongs shall never prosper
While there is a sunny right.
God, whose world-heard voice is ringing
Boundless love to you and me,
First oppression with its title
Are as pebbles in the sea.

Little by Little.

"Little by little," an acorn said
As it slowly sank on its mossy bed,
"I am improving day by day,
Hidden deep in the earth away."
Little by little, each day it grew,
Little by little, it spread the dew;
Downward it sent a thread-like root;
Up in the air sprang a tiny shoot.
Day after day, and year after year,
Little by little, the leaves appear;
And the slender branches spread far and wide,
Till the mighty oak is the forest's pride.

Far down in the depths of the dark blue sea,
An insect train was slowly passing,
Crawling by grain, they are building well,
Each one alone in its little cell.
Moment by moment, and day by day,
Never stopping to rest or to play,
Reels upon reels, they are rearing high,
Till the top looks out on a sunny sky.
The gentle wind and the balmy air,
Little by little, brings verdure there;
Till the summer sunbeams gaily smile
On the buds and flowers of the coral isle.

"Little by little," said a thoughtful boy,
"Moment by moment, I'll well employ,
Learning a little every day,
And not spending all my time in play.
And still this rule in my mind shall dwell,
"Whatever I do, I will do well."
Little by little, I'll learn to know
The treasures of wisdom and of joy;
And one of these days perhaps we'll see
That the world will be the better for me."
And do not you think that this simple plan
Made him a wise and useful man?

Saturday Night.

The week is past; its latest ray
Is vanished with the closing day
And 'tis far beyond our grasp
Its now departed hours to clasp.
As to recall the moment bright
When first Creation sprang to light
The week is past; it has brought
Some beams of sweet and soothing thought,
It has left some memory dear
Of heavenly raptures wasted here,
It has not wended its flight in vain,
Although it ne'er return again—Bouring.

Anecdotes.

A man being awoken by the captain of a boat with the announcement that he must not occupy his berth with his boots on, very considerably replied:
"Oh, the bugs, won't hurt 'em I guess; they are an old pair. Let 'em rip."

A fortune-teller, being in a ball room, heard a gentleman give an account of the death of a rich old widow.

Died yesterday, in her eighty-ninth year, said the narrator.

What a pity! exclaimed the fortune hunter, what a fine match she would have made two days ago!

"Tommy, my son, said a fond mother, on her return from a journey, have you said your prayers night and morning?"

Yes, was the reply: that is, every night; but any smart boy can take care of himself in the daytime.

A gentleman met a half-witted lad in the road, and placing in one of his hands a sixpence and a penny, asked him which of the two pieces he would choose.

The lad replied that he wouldn't be greedy; he'd take the smaller.

Patrick, hereafter you are to commence work at five in the morning and leave at seven in the afternoon.

Sure, sir, wouldn't it be better to commence at seven in the morning, and leave at five in the afternoon?

A down-east girl being bantered one day by her female friends in regard to her lover, who had the misfortune to have but one leg, she replied to them very smartly—
"Pooh! who would have a man with two legs! I wouldn't; they are too common."

YOU HAD BETTER TRY
My Mother's Salve.
THIS CELEBRATED PREPARATION has obtained an enviable and world-wide reputation for its great curative properties, and has been the agent for relieving so many sufferers, restoring them to health and usefulness, that the proprietors feel it a duty they owe to the public for their generous patronage bestowed upon this Salve, to make it accessible to rich and poor, that all afflicted may avail themselves of its healing qualities.

"My Mother's Salve" is a PERFECT CURE for all Corns, prepared from Roots, Herbs and Gums, gathered from the forest, and possesses

HEALING, SOOTHING and PAIN-RELIEVING VIRTUES never before combined in a Salve or Ointment.

"My Mother's Salve" is SAFE and EFFECTUAL, and all those troubled with RHEUMATISM, SALT RHEUM, ERYSIPELAS, GOUT, PILES, and such like diseases, will find in its use great relief, and in most cases a permanent cure.

"My Mother's Salve" In a BURN or SCALD, takes out the fire, soothes the irritating pain, and heals the wound more speedily and effectually than any other preparation.

"My Mother's Salve" Is worthy of confidence, and thousands having used it and recommended it to their friends is a test of its worth. DIRECTIONS for USING

"My Mother's Salve" Are simple. Every mother and nurse know how to spread a plaster and dress a sore, and all who use the Salve will apply it in proportions, renewed at times, as good judgment may direct. For Rheumatism and other pains, rub the part smartly with the Salve. In cases of Coughs, Tightness of the Lungs, Sore Throat, and such like ailments, rub as cases of Rheumatism. In any case of pain a good result follows the use of this Salve. Prepared by A. M. BECK.

Hall's Great
SCROFULAR REMEDY.
THIS Purely Vegetable Preparation is pleasant and agreeable to the taste, and simple in its action, causing neither vomiting nor purging. It acts directly upon the primary cause of disease, regulates the Bowels, removes all vitiated secretions, giving a healthy action to the Liver and correct tone to the Stomach. It overcomes that feeling of languor which is often experienced in the Spring and Summer, and renews and restores the vital energy and Physical Strength.

In thousands of cases of Scrofula and Scrofulous Humors, such as Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scald Head, Tumors, Ulcers, Bronchitis, Asthma, Coughs, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Fever, Sore, White Swelling, Dropsy, Boils, Batches, Itch, Piles, Old Sores, and all diseases which manifest themselves by Eczema or Eruptions on the Skin, it has been used with the most gratifying success, curing every other known remedy has been tried and failed to afford relief.

It is also an effectual cure for Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Flatulency, Costiveness and Derangement of the Urinary Organs.

It is an infallible remedy for irregularities and other diseases peculiar to FEMALES, such as Weakness and Pain in the Back, Strangury, Affections of the Kidneys, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness and Headache.

It can be given with perfect safety and most desirable results in all cases, to any person from infancy to old age.

Made and sold by W. M. SMITH HALL, Sole Proprietor, Quincy, Mass., to whom all orders must be addressed. Sold also by Redding & Co., No. 8 State street; Geo. C. Goodwin, No. 49 Union street, Boston, and all Druggists and Medicine Dealers throughout the United States.

The Circulation of the Blood.

BY W. M. BARBITT, M. D.

The doctrine of the circulation of the blood was first propounded by Dr. Harvey, about two hundred years ago. It originated in the discovery of the valves of the veins by Fabricius ab Aquapendente.

After many years of angry discussion, it was reluctantly received by the medical profession.

It is said of the physicians of Great Britain, contemporaneous with Dr. Harvey — none of whom were more than forty years of age—ever acknowledged there was any truth in the doctrine.

Many anatomists before Harvey's time,
had inklings of the true character of the circulation of the blood; some indeed gave expositions remarkably near to the truth;
especially the anatomist, Realduus Columbus,
who wrote twenty years before Harvey's birth.

Shakespeare, the great poet of the human mind, has been quoted to show the popular idea of the circulation of the blood, long before Harvey's time. Thus he makes Brutus say to Portia:

"You are my true and honorable wife;
As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart."

And Warwick, in King Henry VI., is made
to say:

"So how the blood is settled in his face!

Oh! have I seen a timely part-ghost,

Of ashly semblance, meagre, pale and bloodless.

Being all descended to the laboring heart;

Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,

Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy.

Which with the heart there cools, and ne'er

returneth

To blush and beautify the cheek again."

Such anticipations striking though they are,
by his means derogate from Harvey's merit,
but prove that the crude and hardly formed idea of his immortal discovery, floated vagu-
ly in men's minds before he gave it perfect utterance.

The circulation of the blood was attributed solely to the action of the heart by Harvey;
and until quite recently, has been the prevailing doctrine.

Professor Draper, of the New York University, has lately demonstrated, that the action of the heart extends only through the arteries; and that in the capillaries and veins, chemical forces, assist the heart to circulate the blood.

During each beat of the heart, two sounds
may be heard, followed by a silence.

The first sound is dull, and due to the striking of the apex of the heart against the walls of the chest. The second sound is quick and sharp, and is due to the shutting of the valves of the aorta and pulmonary artery.

The number of pulsations made by the heart differs at different periods of life:
at birth, it is from one hundred and thirty
to one hundred and forty per minute;
at the eighth year, from eighty to eighty-five;
at mature life, is seventy to seventy-five; and in old age, from fifty to sixty-five. Usually there are five pulsations to one respiration.
During sleep, the pulse is less frequent;
after eating or during exercise, it is quickened.
From morning to evening, it becomes slower
by degrees.

The absolute force which the heart exerts
on the blood, is estimated to be thirteen pounds. That the motions of the heart cannot be referred to the presence of the blood, or to any direct action from the brain, is proved by their continuance after its excision
from the body, or even after it has been cut in pieces.

It is now believed by the most eminent physiologists, that the nervous ganglia on the heart are the source of the motive power;
and that the brain and spinal cord influence these movements; but such effects are superadded and not uniform.

In the old times, the heart was looked upon
as the seat of the thoughts and the passions;
it was the centre of all good and evil, purity and uncleanness, devotion and love. In the modern system, the brain has succeeded to the functions which were once imputed to it.

The heart is now considered to be simply an engine of impulse to the blood.

We speak of its valves, its cords, its pipes,
and deal with it as we should with any hydraulic apparatus. How great is the admiration we may express at its exquisite construction! This little organ can execute three thousand millions of beats without a stop!
In the course of a life as we sometimes meet with, it has propelled half a million tons of blood; and, though momentarily wasting, has repaired its own waste all the time. The mathematical rhythm of its four moving cavities; the perfect closure of its mitral and semilunar valves, and the regurgitating play
of its tricuspid, have never failed it.

To the eye of the intellect, there is nothing
lost in transferring it from the regions of metaphor and speculation to the domain of physical science.

For the Patriot.

"Think of Living."

Nature makes ample provision for all the wants of man—her greatest earthly production. For his body—there is the doctor;
for his soul—there is the clergyman. If they do their duty, he will escape ills that will otherwise cause his ruin. But who can fail to perceive, that under the administration of men who are honored with the titles, M.
D. and D. D., the professions they represent are practically failures.

With some honorable exceptions, the doctor
is contented to practice without preaching;
and instead of teaching his fellowmen the laws of health, to show them that every where happiness is the result of obedience to law,
and to exemplify it in his own pure life, thus greatly checking their tendencies to gross indulgence, he becomes a mere pill-giver;
it is even notorious that physicians are the most adroit defectors of physical laws.

This radical blemish on the characters of the "regular" practitioners has done much to break their ranks; for when physicians indulge in alcoholic liquors and tobacco, and eat and drink articles of food that are unfit for the human stomach, it is not surprising that they should lose their influence, and that the thousand and one quacks, with their "hypophosphites" and "hypocrysis" generally should supersede them.

Without imputing to clergymen the disposition to preach without practising; I must enter my protest against the transcendentalism with which they are in the habit of clothing the religion of Christ. The institutions
He established on earth are adapted to human beings, and the clergyman should apply them so as to make man more manly, in order that he may become angelic.

Clergymen seem utterly ignorant of the fact that much of the depravity against which they so zealously labor has its origin in the physical man. Does the wicked desire of the drunkard, the glutton, the poor prostitute, come from the spiritual or corporeal nature? He who indulges in physical appetites they become inordinate! Till like tyrants they will have sway, has already become depraved in soul. Long prayers, while he continues his indulgences; religious services, while he eats like a glutton; change of heart, which does not purify the physical man, can be of no avail in the way of salvation.

"Put a knife to thy throat if thou be a man
given to appetite."
It ministers would study physiology, and
in connection with their spiritual exhortations,
use their eloquence in favor of physical purity; making men feel that the use of alcohol,
tobacco, tea, coffee, and rich food, all pave
the way for disease, drugs and death; that in these abuses of physical laws, are the germs of moral depravity—the dawn of the millennium might be prophesied.

"Water Cure" is the Archimedean lever
that is moving the world by bringing mankind back to natural conditions; so that they may be able to appreciate the dignity of manhood, and the claims of heaven. It teaches that disobedience of God's laws—moral or physical—will surely be punished; and that the only way to escape punishment, is by obedience; that there is no shorter road, and none so pleasant. "Wisdom's ways are ways
of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."

PRO ARIS.

The late comet was a good deal like the products of some of our voluminous story-writers—a long tail from a small head.

The Queen of England is a grand-mother
before she is forty years of age.

Miscellaneous.

Amy Hartly.

In the heart of London is a dark, obscure street, which leads from the narrow avenues and filthy purlieus of Drury Lane. High, old, ruinous tenements give it a peculiar aspect, whilst numberless cages of singing birds, and boxes of pigeons, darken the broken windows, whose ledges are filled, too,
with pots of homely, old fashioned flowers,
which droop on from season to season, in that close city air; like the human plants within, withering, yet existing.

It was on a fine summer's evening that a stout, middle aged man, dressed in an old suit of black, worn at the elbows and glazed with grease and dirt, was proceeding up the street in question. He held by the hand a little girl, about ten years old, whose bright hazel eyes and auburn curls, and fresh blooming complexion, contrasted pleasantly with the hard, thin faces of children of the same age, who, engaged in play, nearly filled the narrow street.

The man entered a long, dark passage,
and ascended a flight of stairs, closely followed by the child, whom he told to hold fast
a small bundle he carried. They entered a large room, which stood half open, at the top of the landing. A woman raised her head from her entrance; she was gaunt and careworn, and, though still young, was bent nearly double from her employment, which was weaving horse-hair chains, on a small iron pin stuck in a cushion before her.

The man sat down and wiped his face with his handkerchief.

Well, John, said the woman, is it true that they are both dead?

Aye, they were gone three days before I went. The fever has carried away half Evertham. William died first, and Annie an hour after.

An' ye had to take the young un? said
the woman.

Why, yes, I thought she'd be more use than to go to the work house. Not but folks offered to take Amy, for, though they were only new comers in the village, it was said that every one liked them.

At the mention of her name the child raised her large dark eyes, which looked heavy and swollen with weeping, and drew close to the man.

The woman, who was about to speak,
stopped and stared at her a moment.

Did they leave any thing after them? she said.

Well, William was not at work when he got the fever, but the minister gave me this pound for the child.

The woman clutched it eagerly and secured it in her bosom.

Supper is over, she said, but there's some cheese left, an' I'll get ye a mug of beer an'
some bread now.

The bread was brought, and Amy Hartly
sat down with her uncle. She liked him better than the woman, for, though she had never seen him before, and he had said little to her on the road, he was her father's brother, and was like him. So the child clung to him with the mysterious instinct of kindred.

When he was done he got up and said he thought it was time for him to be off. Amy learned afterward that he was a sceneshifter in the theatre, and worked at making artificial fires for angling, during the day.

The child, who seemed too tired and sorrowful to eat, gazed around her. All was noise, bustle, and confusion. A variety of trades seemed to be carried on in the poor
but quiet home, and all seemed very strange to her. In one corner a boy was teaching white mice to dance; beside him a poor cripple was making colored paper toys. Two men were seated on a small table making sailor's clothes. By-and-by a boy with a hand-organ, and a blind girl with a parcel of baskets and wickier bird-cages, came in. This last was Amy's cousin Ruth; the small pox had carried off her uncle's other two children the previous winter; this one was spared, but with the loss of sight.

I hope, child, ye haven't brought the fever
in yer clothes, said her aunt, as she pointed out her sleeping place; a pallet stretched on the floor of a little cell-like passage, at one side of the room.

Amy said that all her clothes had been burned, and a kind lady had given her what she had on, and what was in the bundle.

I thought they were over-fire for poor folks' children, muttered the woman.

Amy's bed-fellow was Ruth. She was two years older than herself, but the child thought she was not as good as some blind people. She had known old Ralph, the carrier, who used often to give her a ride upon his donkey, Dobbin, and little Tim, that sang in the choir, and used to string necklaces of daisies for her. Ruth was sullen and kicked her when she came near her in the bed. But little Amy was gentleness itself, and now

the shadow of a great sorrow was too heavy on her heart to heed even unkindness. She kneelt meekly down and said her evening prayer, as she was wont, then crept to the edge of the pallet, and, worn out with fatigue, fell asleep.

The child was awakened at dawn by a confused noise and din of voices. Ruth was gone. She looked out and saw that the inmates of the apartment were already at work.
She dressed herself quickly; but there was no water or any other appliance of the toilet to be seen, and Amy had been reared by parents, who, though poor, were respectable
in their habits and feelings.

She asked Ruth where she could get some water, and she was told at the pump in the yard. After a scanty breakfast, she asked her aunt what she should do, and was answered gruffly to go and learn to make baskets or cages from Ruth, who was not going out that day. But the blind girl would give her little or no instruction, and laughed maliciously at each awkward attempt she made to shape the stiff osiers, which in her own supple fingers grew swiftly into graceful forms.

I fear I can never make one, said the poor child, with a deep sigh, after the twentieth attempt. Oh! I wish I had died too, with dear father and mother! and she burst into a flood of tears.

Mrs. Hartly looked up from some chain that had become tangled, and called out in a ill-tempered tone:

Come, have done with that snivelling, I'll have none of it. What ails the girl? Can't she make a basket?

She's crying 'cause she ain't dead like her father and mother.

The woman, though hardened by poverty
and grief, was not hard-hearted, or she would not have let her husband go a long journey
when they heard the rumor of his brother and sister-in-law's death, to take upon them another helpless burden. She remained silent a moment, then called Amy to her in a softer voice.

She came up to her, wiping the tears from her eyes, and stood tremblingly before her.

Don't cry, Amy, said she, suspending her employment for a moment. You will go to your father and mother one day. They say God has given poor folks a better share of the next world; if so, they'll never be cold, hungry, or want work any more. I had a mother once! but she died of cold and hunger when I was a young thing like you.
I did not cry after her; but I worked on, ever since, until I am all skin and bone, as ye see.

The young girl looked up at the hollow-eyed

merry pool for the nuptials of Amy Hartley and Ellis Warrington.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, April 30th, 1859.

"DON'T TALK MASTER, OF NO SECRET ARE WE."

THE FOREIGN NEWS. There is some warlike news current in Europe with which we have been regaled for the last half century. The same bluster and gasconading which have always characterized our foreign reports is in high feather now; but those conversant with the reputation of continental wellheads do not anticipate war. The poor, puny, weak, miserable, cowardly boobies that control the check-board of European affairs have neither the knowledge to manufacture a proper cause of war, nor science or manhood enough to carry it on with any prospect of success or advantage.

We regret to say that this impotency is not confined to the Continent; but England, of whom better things might be expected, in consequence of a defeat of her ministry on a matter of no possible consequence, comes in for a portion of the contempt in which all Europe is held by intelligent and civilized nations.

Her Parliament is, or is to be dissolved, and a new ministry is probably to be created—and for what? Why, because a certain dog law, or a new method of measurement and sale of milk or some other trivial and unimportant matter has been decided somewhat differently than the ministry believed to be proper or politic.

The fact is, that Lord Palmerston and Lord John Russell, are both weak sisters, and neither of them would be much more than competent to fill the office of hog constable or tythingman in the humblest village of this Commonwealth. Truth compels us to say, that those who have the power in Europe are utterly incompetent to hold the position, in which, unfortunately for the honor and prosperity of these respective countries they are placed.

One good headful of Yankee wit; one good headful of Yankee integrity, backed up with the cool courage and quiet determination of the Hancock Light Guards, would in a short time revolutionize the condition of Europe and make her governments, instead of being weak, inefficient and contemptible, objects of respect, admiration and honor. But so long as the present dynasties are in power; so long will the people be trampled down and their rights disregarded. Revolution is a terrible remedy; but the only hope of the people—is revolution.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE. The vacancy in the Board of School Committee of this town, occasioned by the resignation of John Q. Adams, Esq., who was elected at the annual meeting for both vacancies then existing, has been filled by the choice of William W. Baxter, Esq., who has previously served in that capacity with zeal and efficiency.

GOOD FOR OLD IRELAND. The Galway Steamer, Circassian, Irish, which sailed from Galway on the 19th instant, arrived in St. John on the 26th, and the news brought by her were in the New York and Boston papers of the 27th. She made the passage in seven days, and two and half hours. She anticipated the news by the Comard Steamer Africa, which sailed three days previously.

CHANGED HIS RESIDENCE. Mr. J. K. Kingsley, who, for a number of years past has been the principal, in the clothing emporium of Jos. W. Lombard, of this place, has removed to Waltham to commence business for himself. Mr. K. is a young man, with every qualification to make him popular; a perfect artist in his profession, having served a long apprenticeship in one of the first manufacturing establishments in the city of New York. He carries with him the best wishes of our community for success in the new field of enterprise which he has chosen for his future home.

Magazines for May.—New York Ledger, Mercury, Frank Leslie, Harper's Weekly, Ballow's Pictorial, and other weekly papers always for sale at C. Gill and Co's.

"My Mother's Salve" has proved efficient in healing bad sores and wounds when all other remedies have failed. Always have a box on hand. See advertisement.

C. Gill & Co. invite attention to their new black and light soft Hats. A further supply of Caps received.

ANNIVERSARY PARADE. The Braintree Infantry, Captain Cephas C. Baupus, will celebrate their Anniversary by a parade and dinner, on Monday, May 24, accompanied by the Weymouth Brass Band. They will also practice at Target firing in the afternoon. This spirited corps is in a very flourishing condition at the present time.

CARPETS FOR THE PEOPLE. Purchasers are referred to the scale of prices of the New England Carpet Company published in our paper of to-day.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, April 27, 1859.

Local News.—Municipal Election.—Public Garden.—School troubles.—Decision of the Supreme Court.—Acquittal of Hon. Daniel E. Sickles.—Great success of the Boston Herald.

The local events of the week are not of peculiar interest. A favorable change is developing in business matters; but the process is at a moderate pace. Prices are generally on the ascending scale, which quickened speculation. The plethora of money at low rates of interest induces all kinds of business operations, whether for real or woe. Less credit and more cash business, would bring matters in a few months to a wholesome condition; while an inverse ratio of this principle will invariably lead to panic times.

A City election was held on Monday, and the Public Garden Act was accepted by an overwhelming majority. So that this interesting locality at the bottom of the Common is to be forever kept free from the encroachments of buildings. The vote was carried by six thousand two hundred and seventy-seven votes, to ninety-nine nays.

The Bible convention in the Boston Schools, came again before the School Committee on Monday evening. An order was introduced by the Rev. Dr. Lathrop, so amending the rules as to provide that the morning exercises in all the schools should commence with reading portions of Scripture and the Lord's Prayer, by the Teacher; a very good way in my humble view of settling the controversy. The motion was strongly opposed by many members of the School Committee, on the ground that its action would be premature. Others were in favor of adopting it at once. It was urged that the regulation as now in force, was obscure and capable of different constructions. The Eliot school trouble came in, of course, for a prominent share of the debate; the other side contending, the rule should not be modified while the Catholics were advocating it. Dr. Lathrop's order was finally laid upon the table by the close vote of twenty-one to twenty; a large number of members not being present. It is liable, therefore, to be called up at any time—perhaps passed, and the vexed question settled forever, in favor of religious toleration.

An important decision by the full bench of the Supreme Court, was declared at Salem, on Tuesday, that a liquor shop cannot be entered and the liquors destroyed by any person or persons without process of law. The case was one, it will be remembered, that occurred in Rockport, July 8, 1856, about two hundred women assembled together that day, and made an onslaught on several places where liquor was sold, entering the shops, sans ceremony, and destroying the liquors there found, to the great consternation of the dealers in the fire waters. The main feature of the decision, was, that the women were justified in so doing, as by the Statute, liquors shops are declared to be common nuisances, and therefore could be abated by the destruction of the "creature" therein. Judge Shaw, when the case first came before him, sustained their action, with the understanding that the matter should finally be passed upon by the full bench. The prominent points in the decision of the full bench, are, "That spirituous liquors, of themselves, are not a common nuisance, but the act of keeping them for sale, creates them a nuisance, and the only mode in which they can be lawfully destroyed, is the one directed by statute for the seizure by warrant, bringing it before a magistrate and giving the owner an opportunity to defend his right to it. Therefore it is not lawful for any person to destroy them by way of abatement of a common nuisance, and a fortiori, nor to use force for that purpose."

The Hon. Daniel E. Sickles, has been acquitted at Washington of the murder of District Attorney Key. This verdict was generally expected and great rejoicings were manifested by his friends when the result was made known.

An editorial article appeared in the Boston Herald, of yesterday, setting forth in plain but truthful language, its position and success. The circulation now exceeds fifty thousand daily; standing the third, if not the second daily newspaper in the United States in point of circulation. It is probably perused by over two hundred thousand readers daily. The yearly issues of the Herald are set down at 15,328,000 copies. It may well claim, that this large and complicated establishment, sustained by heavy expenditures, is served by a corps of men (and they might have added, men of gifted talents) who devote their mental and physical labor to it, as the advocates of justice, humanity, and the equal rights of man, in the widest sense of those principles. Continued success to the Boston Herald.

THE STEAMER NIAGARA. Which sailed from Boston, at noon, April 6th, arrived at Liverpool, at noon, April 18th. Thus making the passage across the Atlantic in twelve days. Joseph W. Morton, of this town, took passage in her. The news of the Niagara's arrival out, came by the Galway Steamer Circassian.

CLAM CHOWDER. As usual, every Saturday afternoon and evening, this luxury will be served up at Shaw's Saloon.

AMBATYPES. We understand that Mr. I. H. Houston will remain here during the season, at his room in Goodnow's Building, and that he has just received a German Copy-Camera, whereby pictures may be enlarged from a locket to a life size, at one-half the city prices for such work.

A YOUNG GIRL SEEING THE ELEPHANT. An apparently respectable girl, about fifteen years of age, a few days since, tripped into the police headquarters, and with charming a lairle informed those in charge that she had "just for a notion" ran away from her parents in Quincy, Mass.; visited Boston and saw the sights there, came down to New York on the Norwich boat, and had wandered about until she got tired, and wanted to be sent home, having seen enough sights. The police kindly took care of her, and she stopped last night with the family of the estimable junior of the building. She will be sent home.—New York Herald, 23d.

Summary of Intelligence.

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

Several small children were playing about in open door at Lafayette, Indiana, recently when one, a young child, thrust his tongue in a crevice, when another shut the door, and the tongue was completely severed.

The oldest and largest liquor dealer in Bristol County, Massachusetts, Horatio Field of Taunton, has been sent to the House of Correction for ninety days, for violation of the liquor law.

A jumping match for $100 came off at Fort Erie (N.Y.) a short time since, between two boys, in which the winner made twelve feet at a single jump, and thirty-five feet in three successive jumps, beating his antagonist by two inches.

The Whilmington (N.C.) Journal states that a man who professes to be weatherwise, gives as his opinion that there will be no rain during the month of May. He says the same thing occurred during the year 1850, and again in 1853.

Curious evidence has lately been brought to light in England, showing that Napoleon the Great, in early life, offered his services to the commander of the English navy in the Mediterranean. His services were declined, as he was only an ordinary sort of youth, and began after he entered the French army, and began his great career.

Before the adjournment of the Legislature of Arkansas, the free negro bill became a law. In January, 1859, by this law, all free negroes found in the State, are to be taken to the door of the nearest court-house, and sold to the highest bidder as slaves for life.

The Emperor of Cochinchina was so alarmed at the comet that he shut himself in a tower with poison and a cord, in order to put an end to his existence in the event of its causing any disaster.

Twenty-five solid cords, or seventy-eight thin avoirdupois, of books, have been ordered of a New York firm by the State of Ohio to appropriate eighty-two thousand dollars yearly for educational purposes.

Special Notices.

SPIRITUALISTS MEETING. Services, usual hours, from noon and afternoon in Johnson's (Harrison) Hall, Miss Lizzie Todd will speak to-morrow afternoon in Mariposa Hall; and in the Town Hall in the evening, at 7 1-2 o'clock. A collection will be taken in the evening. Quincy, April 30.

ATTENTION, FIREMEN'S Aid Hook and Ladder Co. No. 1. The members of this Company are hereby notified that their annual meeting takes place on Monday, May 2, at 8 o'clock, P. M. for the choice of officers for the year ensuing, and to pay their members for their services for the past year. Every member is requested to be present. JOSEPH G. BRACKETT, Clerk. Quincy, April 30th.

HUMORS OF THE HUMAN SYSTEM. It is well known that the juices of the body are governed by natural laws, such as regulate the vegetable life in the change of seasons. In winter they are congealed, or in common parlance, the "sap is down." The pores are closed, and our whole body is hard and firm, and an accumulation of impurities takes place in our system.

The genial influences of Spring cause an expansion of all living matter, the sap rises in vegetable life, also, the juices of our bodies are given out and enter into the common circulation. This is a law to which every human being is subject, and the neglect of it has caused a whole summer of misery. Now is the time to apply a remedy that cleanses and scorches every fibre and pore, and eradicates every particle and sediment of humor that has lain stagnant during the winter. Kennedy's Medical Discovery is well known to our readers as the greatest and best blood purifier the world has ever produced.

We advise each and all of our readers to use one bottle of it this Spring; we say one bottle, for that will cleanse the impurities of one season, and prepare the system for the changes of the next. Where the disease has fastened itself and become settled in the system, larger quantities are required. For Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Warts, Sores, Scurvy, Eczema, Ulcerated Sore Legs, Hammer in the Eyes, Running of the Ears from Scarlet Fever or Measles, the Medical Discovery can be relied upon to effect a perfect cure. Granite Quarry for Sale ON the Hudson or North River, 60 miles North of New York City, and three-fourths of a mile below Cornwall Landing, the latter Hill Quarry of the best Granite, situated immediately on the River, where vessels can be loaded with the greatest facility directly from the Quarry, so as to avoid the expense of transportation. A large quantity of the Granite used in the construction of the Croton Water Works was taken from this Quarry, and it has been extensively sold in New York City, for various building purposes.

The Lessee of this Quarry having died it is now offered for sale on the most favorable terms, and affords an opportunity rarely to be met with, for an enterprising person or firm, with small or limited means, to establish an extensive and lucrative business; as the Quarry contains the finest and most valuable Granite in the country, and can be transported and put into the most extensive market, at less cost than any other; so that the difference in transportation and freight would afford a good profit.

This Quarry contains about Seventy acres, and the purchaser can have possession immediately, with a good title, by paying a portion of the purchase money and giving security for the payment of the balance, in annual payments for a term of years.

For terms, address J. DENNIS, Jr., Solicitor of Patents, Washington, D. C. Those wishing to view the property will please call on ELIZA CUNNINGHAM, Cornwall, Orange County, N. Y., between West Point and Newburg. I am desirous of purchasing an "Hour Book," such as were in use before the Revolution.

J. DENNIS, JR. April 23.

Administrator's Sale

Real Estate in Braintree!

THE REAL ESTATE BELONGING TO THE LATE

Capt. SAMUEL FRENCH, 2d, will be sold at Public Auction, by order of Judge of Probate and Insolvency, on FRIDAY, the 13th day of May next, at two o'clock, in the afternoon. The same will be sold in lots as follows—

Lot No 1—The Homestead of said deceased, consisting of about five Acres of Land, and the Building situate thereon. This place is situated within three-fourths of a mile of the South Braintree depot, and in a good state of cultivation, offers unusual inducements to purchasers.

Lot No 2—About one acre of Mowing Land, lying near the House of Messrs Holbrook, Esq.

Lot No 3—About one Acre of Land adjoining Lot No 2.

Lot No 4—About four Acres of Mowing Land, lying in front of the house of said deceased.

Lot No 5—About three Acres of Mowing Land, known as the Rocky Pasture.

Lot No 6—Five Acres of Tillage Land, and known as the Field.

Lot No 7—About six Acres of Pasture Land and known as the Swamp Land.

Lot No 8—About 11 Acres of Fresh Meadow, and known as the Great Swamp and Fresh Meadow.

Lot No 9—Six Acres of Maple Swamp and known as the Maple Swamp.

Lot No 10—Six Acres of Mowing Land, situated near the house of said deceased, immediately after the sale of said wood land on which it stands will be sold.

Conditions made known at the sale.

JONATHAN ARNOLD, Adm.
EDWARD FOLGER, Aucr.
Braintree, April 23d, 1859. 3w

To the Honorable George White, Judge of Probate and Insolvency, for the County of Norfolk.

RESPECTFULLY represents, Aaron Pratt, Administrator of the Goods and Estate of

late of Colchester, in said County, Wheelwright, deceased, that among the assets of said Estate is a note of $25 Bk. given to said Waters by James Hanks, dated Hingham, September 1st, 1856, and payable in five years, with interest annuities, which is secured by a mortgage of two parcels of land in Hingham, in the County of Plymouth, the same parcel containing about thirteen acres and a dwelling house thereon, and the other containing about eight acres; that all other debts due said Estate have been already collected, and can be easily collected by said Administrator, and that the existence of said outstanding mortgage is the only obstacle in the way of a prompt and final settlement of said Estate; and that to order said final settlement, till said mortgage is paid, will occasion inconvenient delay; therefore he prays that he may be allowed to sell and assign the said note and mortgage in such manner as may seem to the best advantage of said estate, agreeably to Chapter 126 of the Statutes of 1851.

AARON PRATT, Adm'r.

Norfolk, ss. Probate Office, Apr. 9, A. D. 1859.

UPON the petition of AARON PRATT,

Administrator of the Estate of

GEORGE WATERS,

late of Colchester, in said County, Wheelwright, deceased, praying that he may be licensed to sell and assign a certain note and mortgage of said deceased—

ORDERED—That said Administrator notify all persons interested in the said Estate, to be held at Quincy, in said County, on the Second TUESDAY of May, A. D. 1859, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said Petition should not be granted; by publishing this order three weeks successively in the newspaper called the Quincy Patriot, printed at Quincy.

The Reason Why

Do you wish to know the reason
Why your neighbor often calls
On the dashing Widow Wilkins,
And attends her to the balls?
Why his carriage is seen stopping
At some noted thing store,
And the Widow goes a shopping
Where she never went before?
If you wish I will tell you—
Let me whisper to you—
It is not your business why.

Do you wish to know why Peter
Has forsaken friends and home,
And left his native country
In a distant land to roam?
Why Polly seems so lonely
Since the day that Peter left—
And all friends she shies the only
Should appear to be bereft?
If you wish I will tell you—
Let me whisper to you—
It is not your business why.

Would you like to know the secrets
Of your neighbor's house and life?
How he lives and how he dines?
And just how he treats his wife?
How he spends his time of leisure,
Whether successful or gay,
And where he goes for pleasure,
To the concert, or the play?
If you wish, I will tell you—
Let me whisper to you—
It is not your business why.

In short, instead of prying
Into other folks' affairs,
If you do your own best justice,
You will have no time for sneers.
Be attentive to such matters
As concern yourself alone,
And whatever fortune befalls
Let your business be your own.
One word by way of hint—
Let me whisper to you—
It is not your business why.

Your Mission

If you cannot, on the ocean,
Sail among the swiftest fleet,
Rocking on the highest billows
Laughing at the storms you meet,
You can stand among the sailors,
Anchored yet within the bay,
You can lend a hand to help them
When they launch their boats away.

If you are too weak to journey,
Up the mountains, steep and high,
You can stand within the valley,
While the multitudes go by.
You can chant in happy measures
As they slowly pass along,
Though they may forget the singer,
They will not forget the song.

If you cannot, in the conflict,
Prove yourself a soldier true,
If where fire and smoke are thickest,
There's no work for you to do;
When the battle field is silent,
You can go with careful tread,
You can bear away the wounded,
You can cover up the dead.

If you have not gold and silver
Ever ready at command;
If you cannot, toward the needy,
Reach an ever open hand;
You can visit the afflicted,
O'er the erring you can weep,
You can be a true disciple,
Sitting at the Saviour's feet.

If you cannot, in the harvest,
Gather up the richest sheaves;
Many a grain, both ripe and golden,
Will the careless reapers leave.
You can glean among the briars,
Growing rank against the wall,
For it may be that their shadow,
Hides the heaviest wheat of all.

Do not then stand idle waiting,
For some greater work to do;
Fortune is a fickle goddess,
She will never come to you;
Go and toil in any vineyard,
Do not fear to do and dare;
If you want a field of labor,
You can find it anywhere.

Anecdotes.

A friend complained to a clergyman for the length of his discourse. Yes, said the preacher; but then, you see, I had not time to make it shorter.

A fastidious boarder at a cheap house, got hold of a ham which looked pretty decently, but said he to his landlord, how horribly it smells. Well, replied the landlord, what of that? Take hold, man; you came to the table to eat your victuals, not to smell them.

An infamous old bachelor, being asked if he had ever seen a public execution, replied, No; but I once saw a marriage.

Do you believe in second love, Mister McQuade? Do I believe in second love? Humph! if a man buy a pound of sugar, isn't it sweet? and when it's gone, don't he want another pound, and isn't that sweet too? Troth Murphy, I believe in second love.

A journeyman out West, was asked whether in a certain case he had been charged by the presiding judge, when he replied: Well, equire, the little fellow that sits up in a pulpit, and kinder bosses it over the crowd, give us a talk, but I don't know whether he charges anything or not.

Here, you little rascal, walk up here and give an account of yourself. Where have you been? After the girls, father? Did you ever know me to do so when I was a boy? No, sir, but mother did. My son, you had better go to bed.

Come out here, and I'll lick the whole of you, as the boy said when he saw a jar of sugar sticks in a shop window.

It appears on the contrary, from these experiments, that the only portion of that organ which is sensible to taste is a narrow space all round. The breadth of this sensible zone varies in different subjects; in some it is not more than two lines, in others double that breadth; it rarely extends to the interior surface. The experiments above alluded to were as follows: A substance having a strong taste is first placed on the centre of the tongue, where it produces no effect; it is then gradually spread out until the perception of taste is announced; this occurs generally on the border, but in some individuals it begins at the distance of a line from it. The pendulum of the palate is also sensible to taste, but the pharynx and tonsils are deprived of the gustative faculty. This is proved by the fact that if they be touched with stick caustic the patient experiences no taste, provided he keep his tongue and the velum pendulum away from the spot.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

Saturday, May 7th, 1859.

FIRE. The alarm on Wednesday afternoon last, was caused by the burning of trees and bushes, near the toll house on the Brimley and Weymouth Turnpike. Our firemen and some three hundred of our citizens were soon on the spot, and quickly stopped the raging flames.

FIRE IN WEYMOUTH. Last Monday afternoon, a barn on the premises occupied by Charles Clapp, was entirely destroyed by fire. The house was considerably injured. Loss about five hundred dollars.

INCREASE OF WAGES. The journeymen Stone-cutters of this town, have held meetings this week, with reference to increase of wages.

DROWNED. Charles B. Lucas, son of the late Joel Lucas, of this town, and brother of Captain Benjamin P. Lucas, of North Bridge-water, was drowned by the upsetting of a boat on Frazer River, California. He was thirty-four years of age.

DISCHARGED. Lieut. William Nash and Lieut. Charles Holmes have been honorably discharged, from the Hancock Light Guards of this town, both having removed to other towns.

LUXURIES OF THE SEASON. Some shipments of green peas have been made to the North from Norfolk, Virginia, last week, at eight dollars per barrel. A few strawberries have been offered in Norfolk, at twenty-five cents per quart, but nobody would pay that for them.

NEW LAW. The Legislature of this State, at its late session, passed an act to the effect that all boarding-house keepers shall have a lien upon the baggage and effects of their guests and boarders, except seamen and mariners, brought to their respective houses, until all the proper charges due by such guests and boarders, shall be paid.

TRAVEL TO NEW YORK CITY. Additional improvements have been made for the comfort, speed and safety of the travelling community, on the Norwich and Worcester line, the most popular 'inland route,' by new and easy cars and first class locomotives of recent construction; and the steamers, Commonwealth and Connecticut, are still under superior management; rendering this avenue of communication almost all that can be desired. C. Pratt, Jr., is the Boston Agent, and E. S. Martin, Esq. officiates at New York.

O. C. & F. R. RAILROAD. See advertisement of the new arrangements for running trains on this road.

EXTENSIVE CUSTOM AND READY-MADE CLOTHING HOUSE. We have much pleasure in drawing the attention of our readers to the advertisement of J. W. Smith & Co., Boston. For the last ten years the proprietors of this establishment have labored, not so much to secure large profits on a single sale, but to give every purchaser full value for his investment, and thus secure a continuation of the trade. In this they have succeeded, and their House has purchased for itself a reputation that has extended to the most distant towns in the New England States. They keep always on hand a large stock, not of 'shop work,' but of fine—we may say elegant—Ready Made Clothing, cut with scrupulous care, from superior fabrics, and made in the most thorough manner. The grand object of this firm is to enable the purchaser to obtain from their store, cheap for cash, a suit of clothes, which, for material, neatness, and finish, would do credit to any custom clothing establishment in New England.—They also give special attention to the Custom Department, in which superior cutters, and none but the best workmen are employed. Success has attended their efforts, and we cordially and confidently commend purchasers to give them a call when in the city.

Constitutional Amendment—Opinions of the Public Press.—General Wilson's views.—Business Prospects.—Wealth of Boston.

It is evident, there is no small interest felt on the 'Two Year's Amendment,' which the people are to vote upon next Monday. Not only is it exciting a great degree of attention in our own State, but it is commented by the press in various parts of the Union, inasmuch as the matter is regarded a political question, destined, if adopted, to the disadvantage of the Republican party. So far, the chances are in their favor of carrying the next Presidency, and perhaps placing Mr. Banks in the Executive chair at Washington. One wrong move on the political chessboard may be fatal to success. Fortunately, for the Republicans, the prominent men of their party, and a great portion of the press are opposed to the measure, even in Massachusetts. The Boston Bee and Journal favor the Amendment. But, says the Springfield Republican, nearly all the prominent and distinguished Republican papers of the State, have declared against it. The Worcester Spy, New Bedford Standard, Hampshire Gazette, the Greenfield Gazette and Courier, the North Adams Transcript, Republican, &c., are known to be hostile to the Amendment.

Mr. Wilson's letter forms the chief topic in the papers throughout our State, and his course is sustained by most of them. The New York Tribune remarks, that Senator Wilson has written a sensible letter on the subject of the proposed Amendment to the Constitution of Massachusetts, requiring that adopted citizens be residents of the State two years after naturalization before being admitted to the privileges of the elective franchise. Mr. Wilson, (says the Tribune), 'discusses the question with marked ability, and comes to the conclusion that justice and sound policy alike demand that the proposition be rejected.' The Boston Journal, although in favor of its adoption, uses the following candid language, in relation to General Wilson's letter. 'Portions of it we think will awaken in many minds some rather curious reminiscences in the past career of General Wilson, which we might properly recall and contrast with the expressions of this letter; for, being a public man, his record is always open to fair comment, and we are glad to say, that he is personally above the weakness of trying to shun any criticism which his course may provoke.'

It is interesting to note, that prominent Massachusetts Republicans, opposed to the Constitutional provision, besides General Wilson, are mentioned the names of Hon. Charles Francis Adams, Hon. T. D. Eliot, Hon. John B. Atley, and others, occupying high official stations. The Worcester Spy says, that the Hon. Eli Thayer is without reserve or equivocation against the Amendment, both as a matter of principle, and of high public policy. In so doing, he simply expresses the feeling of every public man in Massachusetts, whose opportunities for noticing its effects have been unrestricted and whose opinions are known.

In a very recent letter from General Wilson to Hon. Amasa Walker, speaking of his former connexion with the American party, he says, while in that great movement, I avowed at all times my readiness to remedy abuses growing out of the naturalization laws by their revision? But I at all times announced my determination to vote for no proposition which would be unequal, unjust, or degrading to any class of men. This was my position then, it is my position now. Then it required me to oppose, and I did oppose, the 'Twenty-one year's proposition'; the proposition to make foreign-born citizens ineligible to office; the sending out of the country, men for the misfortune of poverty; and the reading and writing Amendment. Now, it requires me to oppose the adoption of a proposition, which simply makes a distinction between adopted and native-born citizens of the United States, by requiring the adopted-citizen to reside in the United States two years before he can exercise the right of suffrage, while it allows the native-born citizen to exercise that right after a residence of one year.

Since the first of May the weather has been unintermittently fine; and has produced a salutary influence on business. The city is full of strangers; and our streets never appeared more lively. Some branches of trade, particularly in domestic goods, are tip-top; and handsome profits have been realized of late by sales in these useful commodities. Within a week good flour has advanced fifty cents at least on the barrel, and continues to have an upward tendency; doubtless produced by the war news from Europe.

The prospects for the continued growth and prosperity of Boston, are very encouraging. Perhaps there is not a city in the Union which affords greater facilities for the increase of material wealth, or greater inducements for trade. Soon, all the new business avenues will be completed, and the splendid ware-houses filled with goods adapted to the wants of all business classes, and with magnetic power sufficient, I hope, to attract customers from all points.

For the Patriot.

Constitutional Amendment

Next Monday the voters of Quincy will be called upon to decide whether a large portion of our citizens shall be deprived of their privileges and rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution; which Constitution, states, that "Every man is endowed with equal rights and privileges." This fact is denied by the proposed Amendment to the Constitution. This being the case, it becomes the duty of every one who is a voter, to oppose this law, which in principle, annuls and destroys the great cardinal and fundamental precepts of our Government—"Taxation without representation."

This principle was the 'war-cry' by which our fathers were stimulated on—in the noble struggle for independence, which had the happy and desired effect in aiding them to consummate and achieve their freedom.

If we look upon the moss-grown columns of the temple of liberty of Greece and Rome, who were once free and flourishing republics, we shall see, that the cause of their destruction was occasioned in every instance, by their being ignorant of a great political position; which was left for America to discover and establish. Evident as the truth appears, we find no friend to liberty in ancient Greece or Rome, asserting that taxation and representation were inseparable. The citizens of these ancient republics, ever proud of their own liberty; imposed, in the freest times of the Commonwealth, the most grievous burdens on their provinces. At other times we find thousands of these citizens, though residing within the walls of Rome, deprived of legislative representation. When America asserted this novel truth, Great Britain, though boasting herself, as alone free among the modern nations, denied it by her legislation, and endeavored to refute it by her arms. But the attempt was vain; for the principles of justice, equality and right, were heard above the din and thunder of war; and reached the ears of all nations, by establishing a new epoch in the world's history of government; that taxation and representation are inseparable. Henceforth, it is the sacred duty of every citizen to consider this position as the only rock on which they can permanently maintain and perpetuate this temple of liberty.

Another fact worthy of notice, is, that while we are endeavoring to make our elective franchise more stringent and arbitrary, England's leading statesmen are trying, with a prospect of success, to liberate her franchise, by reducing the property qualification, from ten, to six pounds sterling; thus placing this great prerogative within the reach of nearly all her subjects. Shall it be said, that while the despots of a foreign country are trying to throw off the yoke of tyranny; we are about to put it on; and that Massachusetts, who boasts so much of her freedom, is about to abrogate and abjure these noble principles, by passing a law to sustain bigotry and intolerance, and to be the first of the "Old Thirteen," to falsify the solemn compact, wherein she agreed to sustain equal and just rights to all.

May each and every voter, who wishes for the future welfare, prosperity and freedom of his country, deposite in the ballot box next Monday, an emphatic "NO," is the wish of a DEMOCRAT.

GRATIFYING INTELLIGENCE. The numerous friends of Professor R. B. Walker in this town, will be glad to read the annexed paragraph, extracted from the National Eagle, of Claremont, (N. H.) relative to the deserved success which has crowned his meritorious efforts:

"Come again." Mr. Russ B. Walker, a native of this town, who has spent the winter in Boston and vicinity as the leader of one of the most popular quadrille bands in that city, we are glad to know has returned here and taken up his residence for the summer on his fine place about a mile north of the village. Few young men have succeeded so well in gaining public favor as a musical leader and prompter for large dancing parties, and in filling his pockets with the needful, as has Mr. W. A few years since, with nothing but a laudable ambition to stand at the head of his profession, and an indomitable perseverance, he started out into the world with his fiddle and his bow, and has within the last year purchased a farm, and has enough 'shot in the locker' to make him entirely independent, as the result of perseverance, industry and frugality. He intends to return to Boston early next Autumn, and pass the winter there in the practice of his profession, but will still keep his home in Claremont."

THE VERDICT. Alfred Sears, tried at Palatka, (Fla.) for the killing of Major J. L. Gregg, has been found guilty of voluntary manslaughter, and sentenced to six months imprisonment and a fine of one thousand dollars. The defence was that Major Gregg had made threats against Sears.

PROBATE COURT. The next term of this Court will be held in this town on Tuesday next.

CLAM CHOWDER. To-day and evening at Slaw's Saloon, Franklin street.

C. G. & Co. have this day added FIFTY New Patterns to their Assortment of Paper Hangings, which they shall sell from six to twenty-five cents per Roll; being new and attractive styles, and never before offered in this market.

HUMORS OF THE HUMAN SYSTEM. It is well known that the juices of the body are governed by natural laws such as regulate the vegetable life in the changed seasons.

In winter they are congealed, or in common parlance, the "sap is down." The pores are closed, and our whole body is hard and firm, and an accumulation of impurities takes place in our system.

The great influences of Spring cause an expansion of all living matter, the sap rises in vegetable life, also the juices of our bodies are given out and enter into the common circulation.

This is a law to which every human being is subject, and the neglect of it has caused a whole summer of misery.

Now is the time to apply a remedy that cleanses and searches every fibre and pore, and eradicates every particle and sediment of humor that has lain stagnant during the winter.

Kennedy's Medical discovery is well known to our readers as the greatest and best Blood Purifier the world has ever produced.

We advise each and all of our readers to use one bottle of it this Spring; we say one bottle, for that will cleanse the impurities of one season and prepare the system for the changes of the next.

Where the disease has fastened itself and become settled in the system, larger quantities are required.

For Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, White Scalls, Shingles, Pustules, Ulcerated Sore Legs, Humor in the Eyes, Running of the Ears from Scarlet Fever or Measles, the Medical Discovery can be relied upon to effect a perfect cure.

"Think of Living"

"Water-Cure" in all its essential particulars has had the sanction of the most learned men of all professions in all ages; but as a system of the healing art, it is still in its infancy. Like most great discoveries, it seems to have awaited accidental circumstances for its development into a distinct idea. But while the honor of establishing Water-Cure as a system, belongs to the unlearned Priesnitz, the praises of water as a medicinal agent have been extravagantly sounded by the most eminent physicians from the days of Hippocrates to the present time.

Hippocrates, the father of medicine, wrote much in favor of the use of water in both health and disease. Galen placed water in the highest rank in his materia medica. Rhazes was far more successful in his water-treatment of small pox than any drug practice since. Avicenna, the Arabian Galen, was a strenuous advocate of water treatment. Hoffman pronounced water a universal remedy. And Boerhaave wrote: "No remedy can more effectually secure health and prevent disease than pure water." Haller, Cuvier, Demosthenes, Milton and Locke drank nothing but water. The reader's patience might easily be exhausted with the recital of illustrious names in praise of water.

While quoting authorities in favor of water, it can be no more than fair to mention some of the methods of curing disease which have been advocated by learned Esculapians and other equally superstitious ignoramuses: for instance—baths of mud, oil, milk, blood, refuse of grapes, gelatine, warm excrements, bees' eggs, sand, sulphur, salt, ashes, oats, carrots, hard soap; which last, could hardly fail of benefitting in many cases. Wrapping in the hide of animals and exposure to the heat of the sun, much like roasting a turkey on a spit. Even the most poisonous and nauseous airs and waters, as well as chemical preparations, are recommended for inhalation in diseases of the air passages. The grease bath is quite a modern invention; having recently emanated from the Allopathic School. The use of mineral waters which is so fashionable among the wealthy, is not out of the reach of the poorest; for any one can produce as healthy a medicated drink or bath by smelting a small quantity of dirt or salt with a large quantity of water.

While drug-treatment appears so absurd when compared with the simplicity of water-treatment, which is so freely acknowledged by all, it may be asked, why the doctors do not practice Water-treatment more extensively? But the problem is easily solved, when we consider that the medical art originated in magical incantations, charms, necromancy, and that professional minds are no less superstitious and fantastical than in the days of the Arabian Magicians.

The ancient priests, who were the first physicians, placed their patients in the most healthy situations; prescribed simple food and water for drink, with plentiful bathing; and then performed their magical ceremonies. Nature cured, and the doctor got the credit.

The more learned modern doctors pay little or no attention to the laws of health; pour down their drugs, and when their patients die, Nature bears all the blame; for surely, didn't the dear doctor do all he could?

Few minds are so unbiassed as to comprehend that disease can be cured without some medicine of some sort, though it be but the infinitesimal essence of an atom. They cannot believe that the mere observance of the simple laws of Nature, is sufficient to maintain and restore health; much less, that there are no other means for the attainment of this greatest of blessings. PRO ARIS.

The Cross Roads.

I declare, Caroline, I must say it! says Mrs. Martin, entering her sister's chamber; I never saw such a Babel as your children make. You are a perfect slave to them. I do not think it any wonder that you are pale, and thin, and just ready to drop into your grave; for you allow them to tread on you at every step. Your back parlor is a sight to behold. I wish you would just look at it. I believe the last I knew of you, you had just taken the trouble to put it in perfect order for the day.

An expression of pain passed over Mrs. Wylie's face as her sister spoke, and rising from the drawer, beside which she was stooping to arrange some fresh linen, she passed her hand across her forehead and said, as she closed the drawer:

I suppose I ought to go back and attend to them. I told them to play there for a while, and amuse Frankie, he is so fretful this morning with his teeth. I dare say they have put the room in some confusion, and she accompanied her sister back to the scene of disorder she had described, trying to calm the emotion that had been roused by Mrs. Martin's rough words as she went.

George, George, is that a good way? she said, as she entered the room where her eldest boy had turned his father's arm-chair bottom upwards, and was riding on the side of it.

O, mamma, are you from your work? cried little Nell, running to welcome her mother's return, and upsetting Frankie in her way. Mamma, mamma, have you come to sit down? called out Kitty, at the same time, dropping the doll she was dressing upon the floor.

O, mamma, it is such fun! chimed George's voice into the same chorus. You see, here is the horse, and there is the carriage, and these old red suspenders of papa's make better reins than the fancy horses had at the fair, and Frankie takes hold of them, and shakes them, and says, 'dit up,' just as plain, and then he laughs to see me trot; and oh, it is so nice!

But have you thought that you might break the chair? asks Mrs. Wylie, mildly. Oh, no, mamma, it is just as strong, said George, dismounting at once, and climbing upon his mother's back; for she had knelt to pick the fallen baby and his box of toys from the floor.

Just look at that! exclaimed Mrs. Martin, under her breath.

George, dear! mamma is not strong enough to bear your weight in this way! remonstrated Mrs. Wylie, turning, nevertheless, towards him the check he was trying to press.

But, mamma, you used to carry me this way, said George, hugging her.

Yes, love, but you were not as heavy then, and perhaps mamma was stronger.

Oh, mamma, did it hurt you? did it, darling mamma? said he, slipping down to the floor, and under her arm, to rest his head upon her shoulder, and pat her cheek fondly and regretfully.

What a great baby you do make of him, said Mrs. Martin, looking with an expression of disgust at the group on the floor.

I am afraid he will lose his babyhood quite as soon as I shall be willing to have him, Martha, said Mrs. Wylie.

Where is Henry this morning? she asked, rising up from the little flock that had gathered round her.

I am sure I don't know, said Mrs. Martin, I sent him out of doors to play. I never allow my whole house to be upset by a flock of children playing in it. If they wish to tear everything upside down, they must choose some more appropriate place for it. Boys of his age must find something to do out of doors. They will never make men if they are always tied to their mother's apron-strings.

I am sure, Martha, said Mrs. Wylie, that you cannot think it best to send them out of doors unless they have some proper and useful work to do there. You would not send them out to learn evil of bad boys in the street, or to find the mischief that idle hands can always find. If they have pleasant and useful employment or amusement out of doors, it is very well, but otherwise I think it is best to keep them with us.

You always had such musty notions, Caroline, about evil and usefulness, and all that sort of cant. I think people are the most useful who keep things in nice order about them. You were always telling what a pleasant home you had before I came to visit you, and I own that it is very pleasant externally, with the walks, and flowers, and fruit trees. Your husband has taken a great deal of pains, and I think you ought to reward him by preserving some kind of order in the house. No home can be pleasant where the children are not kept quiet.

I am sorry they trouble you, Martha! but I am afraid I shall never keep my children quiet, unless I can, at the same time, keep them comfortably and happy, said Mrs. Wylie, decidedly.

The room was by this time restored to order, by the same little hands that had put it in confusion, and that, too, without a word from their mother.

I suppose if we go down town, and return before dinner, we must get ready, said Mrs. Wylie, when she saw that order was restored. I must leave the children here still to amuse themselves, for Biddy is busy with the dinner. Do you hear, George? I wish you to remain here all the time I am gone; don't go out into the yard to play at all.

No, mamma, I'll be just as good, said George, putting up his lips for a kiss.

And you, Kitty and Nell, must stay here till I return. In half an hour it will be time to put Frankie in his cradle, and rock him to sleep; and then you must take your books and sit down to your lessons. I think you will have them nicely learned by the time I come back.

Where is Henry, George? said Mrs. Martin; he was to go with us and bring some parcels.

George did not answer at once, and Kitty said she thought he was in the back yard. Call him, then, Kitty, said Mrs. Martin; and the little girl left the room to obey her request. In a few moments she returned saying that Henry told her that he was busy and could not come.

Did he send me such word as that? said Mrs. Martin, rising hastily and going for him herself.

He is eating papa's nice grapes, said George in a whisper, slipping to his mother's side the moment his aunt left the room. I told him we were not allowed to pick them with our leave, but he called me a little baby-rot, because I would not help him; so I came in for fear I might want some. They are not ripe, and he has to throw them half away, and I don't want to play any more with him in the yard.

Oh, don't say that, my son; he is your cousin, and has come a long way to visit you. You must try and be polite to him.

But, mamma, you always told me not to play with boys that swear, and he swears. Besides he goes in the barn and takes eggs, and yesterday he took some out of Deacon Tompkin's barn. I was so ashamed, for the Deacon might think it was I that took them. This is very bad, George, said Mrs. Wylie. Do you know how many he took from Deacon Tompkin's barn, for we must replace them.

But must I play with him, mamma.

It is a bad thing, George, dear. You must be kind to him, and I will keep you with as much as I can. You can treat him friendly without imitating his bad ways. My little son must learn to be strong. You know we must be strong in this world.

Yes, mamma.

Mrs. Martin, in the meantime, had stepped to the back stoop to call Henry, who, as George had said, was picking grapes only a few feet from her; but it was not until she had called two or three times that he condescended to come from behind the vines and answer her, when he came forward, a pale, frowning, unhappy looking boy, with a handful of grapes, which he continued to eat as rapidly as possible, while he approached his mother.

Who told you that you could pick those grapes? said Mrs. Martin.

O, they let me, said the boy ambiguously.

Well, then, come up stairs and brush your hair, we are to go down town, and you are to bring up some parcels.

No, I'm not, said the boy, still maunching his grapes.

Do you refuse to do what I tell you? she exclaimed, raising her hand for a mild ladylike blow, which he dodged by a gentlemanly bow.

You haven't told me, said the boy, out of a full mouth, and beside I'm not going. I have not got my boat finished, and then I'm sick this morning. Don't feel well enough to bring up parcels. I was just thinking of going to bed. Any way, shan't bring no parcels up town this morning, no how.

Shan't bring no parcels, no how? repeated his mother. That's a pretty way for a civilized boy to talk. Well, if you are sick, come up to bed. You shall stay in bed, you may depend on it, if you are not well enough to bring my parcels for me; and taking his hand she attempted to draw him towards the house.

I ain't a going, said he, drawing back, I'm going to lie down here, under this tree, where I can get fresh air. You brought me here to take the fresh air, because uncle's house was so much out of town, and I'm going to have it.

Well, then, lie down there; that is the best place for you after all; and mind you stay there till I come back. Don't go anywhere else.

Yes, ma, said he, going off with a mouthful of grapes, and leaving his reply very ambiguous as to the portion of her command to which he intended it should be an assent.

The truth was, Mrs. Martin, when she had gained her one point of keeping order and quiet in her house, thought she had done her duty in controlling her children. If they were only out of the way, it was little matter to her what weeds grew up in the soil of their minds, during their absence. She considered it a cardinal virtue in a child, apparently, to avoid an interference with her native love of order.

Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Wylie did their shopping down town, and returned to find Mrs. Wylie's back parlor a perfect Babel, as Mrs. Martin again pronounced it. Mrs. Martin was the elder sister, a person somewhat persistent in her opinions, and in the habit of expressing herself decidedly; and as she had always taken upon herself the task, in their girlhood, of lecturing Caroline into propriety, she did not seem quite willing to give up the office now.

George, in the midst of his lessons, had carelessly let fall his slate and pencil, and had waked Frankie from his sleep. Frankie roused from his morning nap too soon, cried lustily, and as there was not skill enough in the little ones to get him to sleep again, they had to use their wits to amuse and restore him to good humor.

George as a last resort, had found some paper and made a soldier's cap and epaulettes, and with a string of sleigh bells round his waist, was riding about the room on his father's cane, regardless of the bits of paper, and scissors, and books that strewed the floor, while Frankie was following, laughing as loudly as he had cried before. Kitty seeing Frankie amused, had returned to her lessons, while little Nell, in a motherly way, was sitting in a corner, trying to mend the pencils George had broken, and returned them to the box.

There was a slight shadow on the face of Mrs. Wylie, when she saw the confusion about her; but it was gone in a moment, and she asked in a quiet manner:

How came Frankie awake so much before the usual time?

Why, you see, Mamma, said George, I let my slate fall, and it knocked the fire set, and made such a rattling, it woke him up; and we tried and tried, and he wouldn't go to sleep, and kept crying, so I took him up and made a soldier's cap—isn't it a nice one? and he is so pleased. I'll pick them all up, he added, seeing the direction of his mother's eye. But you know you told us once, that we must amuse him, first of all, when you were gone, and we did; and he was just as happy.

Yes, my dear, I think you have done the best you could. You have a nice soldier's cap—red tassel and all. And see your little sister Nell trying to arrange your pencil box for you. Isn't she a kind little sister?

O, yes; Nellie, darling Nellie; and he darted off to kiss her, and then back again to pick up the scissors and paper from the floor.

Well, Caroline, said Mrs. Martin, I do not envy you your task of housekeeping, if when children have made such a mess as this, you tell them they have done the best they could.

I should like to see a child of mine that would venture to upset a room like this.

You know, Martha, said Mrs. Wylie, that grandfather used to say, when we were girls, that we always travelled cross roads. I suppose we do still, but I think it is best not to quarrel about it.

The Real Martyrs of the Age.

It is a matter to be deeply regretted, that among the many applications of labor to modern luxury or convenience, there should be so much suffering. The manufacture of lace is a singular illustration of this. Some of the finest kinds require a thread so fine that it must be spun and worked in damp cellars; a process which costs annually hundreds of female lives. When all the court of England goes into mourning, four dozen girls it has been ascertained from irrefutable facts, are rendered blind for life, so trying to the eyes is the immense labor on black lace which is such a truly mournful eventuality. Finally, we are told that the recent death of a young woman in Paris, employed in lace cleaning, gave rise to an investigation as to the method employed, since a post mortem examination of the unfortunate girl revealed the presence of large quantities of oxydized lead in the system. It appeared that the lace is cleaned by a Belgian process, being whitened by repeatedly dusting it with white lead. Thus, from the beginning to the end of the process, we find the beautifying luxury causing suffering and death.

In the manufacture of friction matches, disease of a most terrible character catches away the bones and destroys life in a great proportion of the operatives, whenever any slight wound gives an entrance to the insidious and subtle poisons employed. Scores of arts are thus burdened by fearful penalties to those practising them, and yet it is remarkable that less has been done to relieve or prevent these sufferings than for any others. Science pushes on with new inventions reckless of the results of the old and only caring to show what brilliant and startling deed can be achieved. It is like a French hospital, where amputations are effected with more rapidity than one would imagine; where, in short, the most amazing surgical operations are performed with incredible skill, and where, after all, the patient dies from careless nursing.

We would commend to those dames who will not eat slave-grown sugar, the consistency of indulging in luxuries which require the worst slavery in the world to produce them, and would recommend to any gentleman desirous of devoting a life to the good of humanity, that they follow science, with a view of reviving the sufferings which it brings with it. They are many in number, dreadful in character, and present a wide field of action to the philanthropist—Philadelphia Bulletin.

An Editor's Life.

An editor, in pursuance of his manifold, complicated duties, has need of as many hands as Briareus, more heads than Cerberus, and as many eyes as Argus; and, like Argus, he should have them always about him. His toil is Sisyphean, a still beginning never ending task. His labor is a perpetual rolling stone, which is to be again propelled to the top than it is rolled back again to the bottom, to be again uprolled with the same result. Nevertheless, albeit, he has little relaxation, your genuine editor is not without occasional enjoyment. When he feasts, it is at another's cost, having from the various plots submitted to his fastidious palate, the privilege of selecting the tit-bits, which, first tasting, he presents to the hungry and expectant public, somewhat in the fashion of the Grand Tartar, who, as we are told, having himself dined, considerably proclaims to the rest of mankind his gracious permission to fall to with what appetite they may.

Discovery of Glass.

Pliny tells us the art of making glass was discovered in the following way: "As some merchants were carrying nitre (saltpetre) they stopped near a river issuing from Mount Carmel. Not readily finding stones to rest their kettles on, they used some pieces of nitre for that purpose! the fire gradually dissolving the nitre, it mixed with the sand, and a transparent matter flowed, which in fact was no other than glass." Chronology says that glass was invented in England, by one Brant, a monk, in the year 664; and that it was first used in private houses in the year 1180. Lord Kames, however, observes: "The art of making glass was imported from France into England, in 674, for the use of monasteries, and that glass windows in private houses were rare even in the twelfth century, and held to be a great luxury."

The Diamond.

The unrivalled brilliancy of this gem has always attracted universal admiration. No other substance, natural or artificial, can rival its lustre, so rich with prismatic colors. It differs in all other gems in not being composed of earth, but of carbon. The color of diamonds are various. The finest are colorless in themselves, and have only what they derive from refracting the rays of light; these are regarded as of the purest water. Some have a tinge of pink, red, blue, or green, which are next in estimation. Yellow diamonds are common, though much esteemed. Brown diamonds are less valuable, and still less so are those which are cloudy or are marked with flaws.

The diamond is a substance of considerable utility in the arts, independently of its value as an ornament. Fine drills are made of small splinters, which are used for drilling holes in rubies and other hard stones used by watch jewellers in the best kind of clock work, gold and silver wire-drawers, and others, which require very fine holes drilled in such substances. These drills are also used to pierce china-ware where rivets are to be inserted; also for piercing holes in artificial enamel teeth, or any vitreous substance, however hard. The fine powder is used for grinding down other very hard stones none of which can be cut or engraved without this material; arms, crests, camos, intaglios, &c., are engraved upon cornelian, onyx, agate, by means of diamond powder.

A matter of much importance is the setting of diamonds, which depends partly upon their quality. The finest brilliants are always set open, that is, without a back. Shallow brilliants, that have a great surface, are generally set close, or with a back of black substance; and then frequently much ingenuity is exercised, an inferior stone being sometimes made, by concealing defects, to appear like a perfect brilliant.

What are called foils, are thin leaves of metal, placed under a precious stone, in order to increase its brilliancy or to give it a different color; they are of gold, silver or copper. The trade of the diamond-cutter is wholly distinct from that of the lapidary, whose business it is to polish the inferior gems. The diamond-cutters of England and Holland, are said to be the best in the world. Attempts have been made to fabricate the diamond by chemical means, but hitherto always without success; the idea, however, is not absurd, since the composition of the diamond is known to be pure carbon only, and, could the means of crystallizing carbon be discovered, the object would be attained.

Mystery Reason and Truth.

Night comes down over a ship at sea, and a passenger lingers hour after hour on the deck. The waters plunge and welter and glide away beneath the keel. Above, the sails tower up in the darkness, almost to the sky, and their shadow falls as it were a burden on the deck below. In the clouded night no star is to be seen, and as the ship changes her course the passenger knows not which way is East or West, or North or South. What islands, what sunken rocks may be on her course—or what the course, or where they are, he knows not. All around to him is Mystery; he bows down in the submission of utter ignorance.

But men of science have read the laws of the sky. And the next day this passenger beholds the captain looking at a clock, and taking note of the place of the sun, and with the aid of a book composed of rules and mathematical tables, making calculations. And when he has completed them, he is able to point almost within a hand's breadth to the place at which, after unnumbered windings, he has arrived, in the midst of the seas.—Storms may have best, and currents defied; but he knows where they are and the precise point, where a hundred leagues over the water, lies his native shore. Here is Reason appreciating and making use of the revelations (if we may so call them) of science.

Night again shuts down over the waste of waves, and the passenger beholds a single seaman stand at the wheel, and watch, hour after hour, as it vibrates beneath a lamp, a little needle, which points ever, as if it were a living finger, to the steady pole.

This man knows nothing of the rules of navigation, nothing of the course of the sky; but reason and experience have given him Faith in the commanding officer of the ship—faith in the laws that control her course; faith in the unerring integrity of the little guide before him; and so without a single doubt he steers his ship on, according to a prescribed direction, through night and the waves; and that faith is not disappointed. With the morning sun, he beholds far away the summits of the grey and misty highlands, rising like a cloud on the horizon; and as he nears them, the hills appear, and the light-house at the Poetry.

Sacred Silence

Never with blast of trumpet,
And the clarion wheels of fame,
Do the servants and sons of the Highest,
His oracles proclaim.
But when grandest truths are uttered,
And when holiest depths are stirred,
When our God Himself draws nearest,
The still, small voice is heard.

He has sealed His own with silence—
His years, that come and go,
Bringing still their mighty measures
Of glory and of woe,
Have you heard one note of triumph
Proclaim their course begun?
One voice or bell-giving tidings
When their ministry was done?

Unheralded and unheeded
His revelations come,
His prophets before their scorn,
Stand resolute, yet dumb;
But a thousand years of silence—
And the world falls to pieces—
And kiss the feet of the martyrs
They crucified before!

Shall I have part in the labor,
In the silence that came and went,
Of the pains divine, eternal,
That He opens to my sight?
In the strength and the inspiration
That His crowned and chosen know?
O well might my dearest sorrow
Into songs of triumph flow!

For I hear in this sacred stillness
The fall of angelic feet,
I feel white hands on my forehead,
With a benediction sweet;
They say to me, "Labor in silence—
For dearer to God are the songs
Of one earnest and loving spirit,
Than the poems of joyful throngs."

The rivulet sweetest murmurs
Atar in the forest glade,
And the nightingale's wildest warbles
From dappled leafy shade;
So the poet sings most divinely
From the noisy crowd apart,
And the lays most worthy of laurels
Are those he hides in his heart.

Oh I hear in this sacred stillness
The fall of angelic feet,
I feel white hands on my forehead,
With a benediction sweet;
They say to me, "Labor in silence—
For dearer to God are the songs
Of one earnest and loving spirit,
Than the poems of joyful throngs."

Two Years Old.

In every nook or corner
His rosy eye is sure to peep,
And grandma's pocket he will try
To fashion, but it's too deep.
He puts the buttons off my dress,
And then says, "Look! My pretty boy!
When I might scold, I pause to kiss
This upturned face, so full of joy."

His father's hat he loves to wear,
And, hiding half his tiny head,
A glow of beauty rich and rare,
Upon that old black hat is shed.
For "heaven no form so dark and deep,
His dimpled face, all bright with bloom,
Peeps out, as rosy vapors peep
Sometimes from clouds of wintry gloom."

He'll shyly pull his sister's hair,
Or scold her toys, and run to me,
But when they gather round in prayer,
He, too, will bend his little knee;
And though he scarce can speak a word,
There's a worship in his speaking eye,
And Johnny's prayer I know is heard,
When he looks up to God's blue sky.

Trip Lightly.

Trip lightly over trouble,
Trip lightly over wrong;
We only make grief double
By dwelling on it long.
Why clasp we's hand so tightly?
Why sigh o'er blossoms dead?
Why cling to forms no more?
Why not seek joy instead?

Trip lightly over sorrow,
Though this day may be dark,
The sun may shine to-morrow,
And gaily sing the lark;
Fair hopes have not departed,
Though roses may have fled;
Then never be down-hearted,
But look for joy instead.

Anecdotes.

A sleepy deacon who sometimes engaged in popular games, hearing the minister use the words, "shuffle off this mortal coil," started up, rubbed his eyes, and exclaimed—
Hold on! it's my deal!

A teacher endeavoring to make a pupil understand the nature and application of a passive verb, said:
A passive verb is expressive of the nature of receiving an action; as, Peter is beaten. Now, what did Peter do?
Well, I don't know, answered the boy, pausing a moment, with the gravest countenance possible, without he boiled!

An Irishman, who had returned from Italy, where he had been with his master, was asked in the kitchen—
Yea, then, Pat what is the lava I hear the master talk about?
Only a drop of the crater, was Pat's reply.

I think you must allow, said a pompous gentleman, that my jests are very fair.
Sir your jests are like yourself, was the quick retort. Their age make them respectable.

What plan, said one actor to another, shall I adopt to fill the house at my benefit?
Invite your creditors, was the reply.

What are the chief ends of man? asked a Sunday school teacher of one of her pupils.
Head and feet, was the prompt reply.

My Mother's Salve
THIS CELEBRATED PREPARATION has obtained an enviable and world-wide reputation for its great curative properties, and has been long and generally used by so many sufferers, restoring them to health and usefulness, that the proprietors feel it a duty they owe to the public for their generous patronage bestowed upon this Salve, to make it accessible to rich and poor, that all afflicted may avail themselves of its healing qualities.

"My Mother's Salve" Is a PERFECT CHEMICAL COMPOUND, prepared from ROOTS, HERBS and GEMS, gathered from the forest, and possesses a

HEALING, SOOTHING and PAIN-RELIEVING VIRTUES never before combined in a Salve or Ointment.

Is SAFE and EFFECTUAL, and all those troubled with RHEUMATISM, SALT RHEUM, ERYSIPELAS, GOUT, PILES, and such like diseases, will find in its use great relief, and in most cases a permanent cure.

"My Mother's Salve" In a BURN or SCALD, takes out the fire, soothes the irritating pain, and heals the wound more speedily and effectually than any other preparation.

"My Mother's Salve" Is worthy of confidence, and thousands having used it and recommended it to their friends is a test of its worth. DIRECTIONS for USING

"My Mother's Salve" Are simple. Every mother and nurse know how to spread a plaster and dress a sore, and all who use the Salve will apply it in proportion, renewed at times, and good judgment may direct. For Rheumatism and other pains, rub the parts smartly with the Salve. In cases of Cough, Tightness of the Lungs, Sore Throat, and such like ailments, rub as in cases of Rheumatism. In any case of pain a good result follows the use of this Salve. Prepared by A. M. BECK

SCROFULAR REMEDY.

THIS Purely Vegetable Preparation is pleasant and agreeable to the taste, and simple in action, causing neither vomiting nor purging. It acts directly upon the primary cause of disease—regulates the bowels, removes all vitiated secretions, acting as a powerful agent to the liver and correct tone in the stomach. It overcomes that feeling of languor which is often experienced in the Spring and Summer, and renovates and restores the vital energy and Physical Strength.

In thousands of cases of Scrofula, Erysipelas, Humors, such as Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scald Head, Tumors, Ulcers, Bronchitis, Asthma, Coughs, Inflamatory Rheumatism, Fever, Sores, White Swelling, Dropsy, Boils, Badger's Rheum, Old Sores, and all diseases which manifest themselves by Eruptions or Eruptions on the Skin, it has been used with the most gratifying success, after every other known remedy has been tried and failed to afford relief.

It is also an effective cure for Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Flatulency, Constiveness and Derangement of the Urinary Organs.

It is an infallible remedy for irregularities and other diseases peculiar to FEMALES, such as Weakness and Pain in the Back, Strangury, Affections of the Kidneys, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness and Headache.

It can be given with perfect safety and most desirable results in all cases, to any person from infancy to old age.

Made and sold by W. M. SMITH HALL, Sole Proprietor, Quincy, Mass., to whom all orders should be addressed. Sold also by Redding & Co., No. 8 State Street; Geo. C. Goodwin, No. 99 Union Street, Boston, and all Druggists and Medicine Dealers throughout the United States.

Miscellaneous.

"Not by Might."

In one of the narrowest streets of a great northern town, there lived ten years ago, a dayman and his wife. They had no children; they were rough and ignorant; they had a godless home—the scene of many quarrels and of few enjoyments. The wife, however, had known better days; days of grief, yet forgotten, service at a farm "down south;" and with a gentler husband might have been induced to tread a better path. But tall George Robinson was never known—at least in these days—to make anybody better.

It happened at this time that Sally's former mistress died, leaving an orphan almost penniless. Hearing of this, Sally's old love awoke.

Miss Kate must come here George, she said, one evening.

She shan't, said George. I can't afford it, then. And more that, I can't live with your sams. They're all a set of hum—

Now, George! and Sally grew angry. She won't cost you a penny. She'll earn her living, or I'll earn it for her.

Gammon! said George.

I tell you it isn't gammon.

And I tell thee it is; and to prove it, I'll let her come. But I'll bet thee—

No, I won't bet, said his wife, turning away to hide her joy; but I'll ask Sykes to write to her, and tell her to come at once.

Go ahead, then said Robinson, I'll try her; but if she don't earn her bread I'll kick her out, you just remember that.

Sally went her way, and in another week Miss Kate arrived, with a light purse and a heavy heart, at the great terminus of the southern railway.

O Sally, Sally! she cried, weeping bitterly. I haven't a friend in the wide world but you.

Dear lamb! said the kind-hearted creature, in whose eyes Kate was still the little child she cared for years ago. I'll make you happy if I can, I will.

God help you, said Kate; say that dear Sally—

God helping me, said Sally, speaking quickly.

No; say it like a prayer.

I can't, I never pray.

O Sally, how very sad! But God has sent me here that we may pray together; don't you think so?

Sally did not answer. She began to reverence this girl of fifteen, as she once had revered her mother. Yes; it was true that God had sent the child.

Miss Katie, as Sarah had been wont to call her, was a womanly little personage, with a kind face set off by large loose curls, and eyes of great depth and beauty. Trained by a Christian mother, she was already one of Nature's gentlewomen; industrious, thrifty, clever in domestic matters, and possessed of a true heart that found its joy in God. As they walked home she spoke of her dead mother.

She prayed for you, dear Sally.

Dare say, said Sally, in a husky voice, as they at last turned into the street which she described as "ourn." And you'll not mind my husband, Miss, she added, with her hand upon the door. He's rough, but he ain't bad-hearted.

O, I am resolved to make friends with him, said Kate.

Sally shook her head doubtfully, and went in. A group of her husband's friends were gathered around the fire, and one of them, who had received a better education than the rest, was reading a newspaper and lecturing thereon.

Holloa! cried George, here's the old lass already! But where's "our Miss?"

Outside, said Sally; d'ye think I'd bring her into such a smoke as this? Pah! it's enough to smother a poor body. Open the window, Mr. Sykes, there's a good creature. I'm sure my miss can't eat her supper here.

Then she can go without, said George, "or eat out-o'-door. Nobody wants her to stay here, I tell thee!"

Sally had begun the wrong way, and she knew it; but the entrance of her guest prevented her reply.

This is my husband, miss, said Sally, respectfully; and Sykes and Rock and Wilson have come to sit a bit.

And are about to go off to the beer shop to make room for you, said Wilson, with mock deference.

No, don't do that, said Kate. I wish to hear you talk. What you said just as Sally opened the door, about the poor man's rights were very good. I like to hear you. I want to know all about it.

The four men started, as, laying aside her bonnet, she sat down at the table; while Bob Sykes nearly twisted his short neck in order to avoid puffing a smoke cloud into her pretty face. But Wilson did not proceed with his long speech, for Sally, finding that the fire was low, began to scold her husband, who, on his side, showed signs of insubordination.

Bother your kettle, he exclaimed, with an angry gesture. I'll turn you and your kettle out together if you don't take care.

You won't! cried Mrs. Robinson, angrily; though I'd turn out myself as soon as look, I would.

No, no, dear Sally, and a little hand lay on her arm, I don't want tea to-night, and if you say such words on my account I shall be very wretched. Let me have some cold water and a piece of bread.

No, that thou shan't! cried Bob Sykes, starting up. I'll blow the fire myself, I will; and words we will not write escaped his lips.

You are so kind, said Kate, and yet she shuddered. Will you forgive me if I ask you a great favor.

Forgive thee—with that face and voice—

Then don't ask God to send you to hell if you don't blow the fire.

Bob drew back with a frown. What! don't you like it, Miss Sanctified? he said mockingly.

Her eyes were full of tears as she looked up. Did you speak to your boy like that? she asked, in a voice that reached his ear alone. Is it a worse thing to be sanctified than to live wickedness.

He did not answer, but began to blow the fire, while Sally set the tea-things on a little table in the corner. Presently, however, he stopped, and looked at Kate.

And dost thou mean to say that thou art really sanctified? he said, enquiringly, because if thou does, thou art a humbug.

I don't, said Kate, sitting down beside the fire. To be sanctified is to be quite, quite holy, and I am only just beginning to love holiness.

O, that's it, is it? And how can'st thou to begin? Didst see a vision, or a ghost, or what?

I saw the love of Christ in dying for my sins, said Kate, fixing her deep look on him; I saw what I hoped your dead boy saw before he died.

And what was that?

That heaven was my home, because Christ died for me.

Kate thought a minute, with her eyes fixed on the fire. It does not matter, she said presently. I would rather be thought a fool and go to heaven, than think myself wise and be lost.

In answer to this Bob blew the fire again, and when, at last, the water began to boil, he took up his hat and left the house without a word.

And what's up with Bob Sykes? asked George, with a broad stare.

Why, bast thou not heard 'tlass yonder preach about his lad 'at died? asked Rock, with a glance at Kate. She's worked him up, my word for it, for young Bob was one of her own sort, and all the time that he laid dying, old Bob never saw a single oath.

The more fool he, to be led about by a pack of women and children, said George Robinson. Just let me catch her preaching about me, and I'll tell her what's o'clock.

Kate heard him, and her heart beat all the quicker; but she did not fear.

Mrs. Robinson had a temper; there was no question about that. It was a well known fact that said temper was by no means a good one. And yet she did not drive her husband to the beer-shop at the corner; perhaps because she was a first-rate plain cook, and had always a good fire in winter and a quantity of home-made ginger beer in summer, for him and his rough guests.

Miss Kate soon discovered this sad failing in "dear old Sally," and set herself diligently to amend the matter. In this she succeeded, that quarrels between the husband and wife occurred less frequently, and were less noisy, than of yore. Still, there was much need of their evening readings, and Kate's earnest prayers; for Sally had rather a liking for the excitement of an altercation, and George was often rude to his wife and her gentle guest.

One evening, when Bob Sykes had ventured to face Miss Kate once again, and when George was about to attack a dish of porridge and a quart bowl of milk, Sally sat down beside her little friend, and watched her busy hands; for Kate was already bonnet-trimmer to the neighborhood.

Go mend my stockings, said Robinson, who was provoked that his recent prophecy concerning the idleness of the new comer appeared so likely to remain unfulfilled. They'd best look sharp, I tell thee, or I'll make thee darn that loyle next Sunday.

Sally looked up with a sharp word on her lips, but a look from Kate checked her ready anger. Swallowing a large amount of indignation, she waited a few minutes and then spoke.

The stockings are mended already, old boy; and thy waistcoat too. Dost think we do nothing all day.

George looked at her in silence. Not so Mr. Robert Sykes, to whom this gentle answer was something new.

Why, Sally, thee'rt mad! he cried. What's done with thy cheek, old lass?

Sally looked at Kate, and said, ask my young lady.

Bob looked at Kate, and smiled till his great whiskered face looked almost handsome. It's all thy doing, then, is it? I thowt it were. Thou dost read the book to the old lass, Miss Kate?

I have read God's book, Mr. Sykes, said Kate, and Sally has listened to His holy words. Would you not like me to read to you sometimes?

She ventured to say this because his manner was at once respectful and confiding; because his smile was so unlike that of their first meeting. He answered by placing a bible in her hand. Yes, read that, he exclaimed, with great emotion; it belonged to my lad, 'at's gone. Read where he put marks, will thou.

Not here, cried Robinson, springing up and snatching the bible from the white hands of Kate. I'll have no game o' that sort here, I tell thee.

O, George, said his wife pleading, let her go on.

I won't! said Robinson, whose face was flushed with passion; you say another word, and I'll pitch your old book into the fire.

It was Bob's turn to speak now. Just let me catch thee at it! he cried, give me that book, I tell thee, or—

Or what?

Involuntarily Bob Sykes clenched his fist.

It was enough. Another moment, and the book was cast into the flames; another, and Kate, at the price of a scorched hand, had rescued it from destruction; another, and Bob Sykes had flown at Robinson, who, on his part desired nothing better than a fight; another, and little Kate, rushing between the combatants, was, by George Robinson's unmanly hand, laid senseless on the floor.

Blood! blood!! cried Sally, as thrusting aside a mass of curls she showed a fearful wound. Run, George, if you don't want to be a murderer; the doctor—for your life.

He did run as for life, with that word, "Murderer," ringing in his ears; that senseless form with the blood streaming from a ghastly wound ever before his eyes. The doctor came back with him, and they carried her up stairs.

God's ways are not like ours. That dreadful night was the beginning of better times, not only to George Robinson but to Bob Sykes and Sally.

As little Kate recovered very slowly, they had to carry her in their strong arms, to tempt her appetite with dainty fare, and to anticipate her every wish. And all this, did those two rough men accomplish; even more tenderly than the kind hearted Sally; as, a silent rivalry, they strove night after night to hasten her recovery. There was no smoking then, no noisy talk. Kate lay upon a little couch that George had carefully arranged with chairs and boxes, and he listened dreamily while Sykes, who knew well how to please her, read in a low voice the chapters his boy had loved; and Robinson, no longer opposing this, listened until at last he learned to obey the Word.

And thus, although Kate was too ill to talk to them, she knew that the good work was begun in those three hearts; and when at last, leaning on George's arm, and with Bob Sykes and Mrs. Robinson before her, she walked in gratitude, too dear for words, to the beloved and longed for house of prayer, it was her joy to know they were all, through faith in Christ, at peace with the Most High.

Yes, little Kate, thy prayers were heard and answered; but it was not by thy might nor thy power, but by the Spirit of the living God, that those three stubborn hearts were bowed before the cross. And yet it shall be remembered evermore in Heaven, that thou wast chosen as the human instrument in this great work of God; that it was on the teachings of thy life he poured his blessings in that life's sweet spring; that thou might shinest as do the stars, in his all glorious kingdom.

Oil of Peppermint.

In Western New York, and in some parts of Pennsylvania, the traveller perceives large fields of peppermint, covering many acres. In New York, farmers have become wealthy by the cultivation of this shrub alone, and we have wondered why the cultivation of this and other articles outside of the common staples of agriculture, should not be more attended to in New England. The only reasonable explanation, it seems, is that the inventive enterprise of New England is absorbed in the mechanic arts and manufactures, and not enough of it devoted to practical cultivation. We find the following remarks in the Philadelphia Pennsylvania, where they appear, not seemingly as original, but yet without credit, and whether they apply to the Philadelphia or Cincinnati market we cannot tell, but suppose the latter.

"Pure Oil of Peppermint is a scarce commodity. At least nine-tenths of this description of oil received here is mixed with the oil of fennel and other weeds. This adulteration is not necessarily intentional on the part of the producer, but is the result of carelessness in allowing the weeds to grow up with the mint, and all to be distilled together. The effect upon the market, however, is the same as though the adulteration had been designed. The inferior will not command the same price that the pure oil will bring, and by being pressed upon the market for sale, the price of both kinds is depressed. The general quotations for oil of peppermint in this market are one dollar fifty to one dollar seventy-five cents a pound; but pure oil is at present very scarce, and will readily command two dollars a pound.—Philadelphia.

Poetry.

The Four Travellers.

Four travellers sat one winter's night
At my father's board so free,
And he asked them why they left their land
And why they crossed the sea.

One said for bread, and one for gold,
And one for a cause of strife,
And one he came for a lost love's sake,
To lead a stranger's life.

They dwelt among our hamlets long;
They learned each mountain's way;
They shared our sports in the woodland green,
And by the crags so gray.

And they were brave by flood and fell,
And they were blithe in hall;
But he who led the stranger's life
Was blithest of them all.

Some said that the grief of his youth had passed
Some said his love grew cold;
But nought I know if this were so,
For the tale was never told.

His mates they found both homes and friends
Their heads and hearts to rest;
We saw their fields and flocks increase,
But we loved him still the best.

Now he that came to seek for bread
Is lord of my father's land;
And he that fled so far from strife
Hath a goodly household band.

And he that sought the gold alone
Hath wedded my sister fair;
And the eaks are green and the pastures wide
By their pleasant homesteads there.

But when they met by the winter fire,
Or beneath the bright moonlight,
Their talk is yet of a whirling stream,
And a brave life given for mine.

For a grave by our mountain river side
Grows green this many a year,
Where the flower of the four sleeps evermore,
And I am a stranger here.

Blue Eyes.

Blue eyes are full of danger—
Beware their tender glow!
They'll leave thy heart a stranger
To peaceful hours below!

I warn you men, give earnest heed!
Let not bright eyes your sight mislead;
And when blue eyes your glances win,
Look not too deep, too deep therein!

Blue eyes with soul are beaming;
They'll look thee through and through;
With light of love they're streaming,
So mild and warm, and true.

And when my heart is sore distressed,
And sorrow fills my lonely breast,
Let, then, blue eyes my sorrow win,
What joy, what bliss I see therein!

Blue eyes from heaven are lighted
With holy, soul-born glow,
To cheer poor man benighted,
And charm him out of woe.

And when cold wintry clouds arise,
And shroud in gray the sunny skies,
Then let blue eyes my glances win!
I find my sky, my day therein!

Labor.

Toil swings the axe, and forests bow:
The seeds break out in radiant bloom;
Rich harvests smile behind the plow,
And cities cluster round the loom;

Where tottering domes and tapering spires
Adorn the vale and crown the hill,
Stout labor lights its beacon fires,
And plumes with smoke the forge and mill.

The monarch oak, the woodland's pride,
Whose trunk is seamed with lightning scars,
Toil launches on the restless tide,
And there unrolls the flag of stars;

The engine with its long, of flame,
And ribs of brass and joints of steel,
From labor's plastic fingers came,
With sobbing valve and whirling wheel.

'Tis labor works the magic press,
And turns the crank in loaves of toil,
And beckons angels down to bless Industrious hands on sea and soil;

Here subterranean toil with shining spade,
Links like to lake with silver ties,
Strong truck with pulses of trade,
And temples towering to the skies.

Anecdotes.

I sell peppermints on Sunday, remarked a good old lady who kept a candy shop, because they carries 'em to church and eats them and keeps them awake to hear the sermon; but if you want pickled limes you must come week days. They're secular commodities.

Daddy, why is a public house like a bad shilling?
'For my word, I don't know, replied daddy after puzzling for five minutes.
Because you can't pass it, said the boy.

An old widow, when her pastor said to her, God has not deserted you in your old age, replied:
No, sir; I have a good appetite still!

A landlady discovering one of his customers, who was drunk, "sloshing about" in the mire, went to his assistance, and setting him upon his feet inquired if he was sick, or what was the matter.

No, replied the boozey customer, I ain't sick, nor I ain't drunk; but I'm mightily discouraged.

An old lady wishing to make a clergyman believe she often read the Bible, took it up as he was coming in at the door, and upon opening it exclaimed:
L! how glad I am, for here are my spectacles which I lost three years ago!

A minister of the gospel, with not much of a pulpit gift came into the place of worship drenched with rain, and said to a brother who stood by, as he shook, and brushed, and wiped his clothes:
I shall certainly take cold if I go into the pulpit so wet.

Oh no, was the reply, you are always dry enough there.

YOU HAD BETTER
TRY
My Mother's Salve.

THIS CELEBRATED
PREPARATION has
obtained an enviable and world-wide reputation for its great curative properties, and has been the agent for relieving so many sufferers, restoring them to
health and usefulness, that the proprietors
feel it a duty they owe to the public for their
generous patronage bestowed upon this Salve,
to make it accessible to rich and poor, that all
afflicted may avail themselves of its healing
qualities.

"My Mother's Salve"
Is a PERFECT CHEMICAL COMPOUND, prepared
from ROOTS, HERBS and GUMS, gathered from
the forest, and possesses
HEALING, SOOTHING and PAIN-RELIEVING VIRTUES
never before combined in a Salve or Ointment.

"My Mother's Salve"
Is SAFE and EFFECTUAL, and all those troubled with RHEUMATISM, SALT RHEUM, ERYSIPELAS, GOUT, FILLS, and such
like diseases, will find in its use great relief,
and in most cases a permanent cure.

"My Mother's Salve"
In a BURN or SCALD, takes out the fire,

THIS Purely Vegetable Preparation is pleasant
and agreeable to the taste, and simple in its action, causing neither vomiting or purging. It
acts directly upon the primary cause of disease,
regulates the Bowels, removes all vitiated acrotosis, giving a healthy action to the Liver and correcting the tone in the Stomach. It overcomes that feeling of Lassitude which is often experienced in the Spring and Summer, and renovates and restores the vital energy of the System.

In thousands of cases of Scrofula and Scrofu-
lous Humors, such as Salt Rheum, Erysipelas,
Scald Head, Tumors, Ulcers, Bronchitis, Asthma,
Cough, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Fever,
White Swelling, Dropsy, Boils, Barber's Itch, Piles, Old Sores, and all diseases which manifest themselves by Eczema or Eruptions on
the Skin, it has been used with the most gratifying
success, after every other known remedy has been
tried and failed to afford relief.

It is also an effective cure for Liver Complaint,
Dyspepsia, Flatulency, Costiveness and Derange-
ment of the Urinary Organs.

It is an infallible remedy for irregularities and
other diseases peculiar to FEMALES, such as Weakness and Pain in the Back, Strangury, Af-
fections of the Kidneys, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness and Headache.

Miscellaneous.

Kitty Loyd.

There must be some attraction down that way.

The young man spoke laughingly. The two friends were strolling down the beautiful garden walks of a pleasant house of which we had a former glimpse.

It was ten miles from Sing Sing.

Oh, I don't know. Carelessly spoken, but then a flush and a half smile accompanied the words.

Not quite a confirmed bachelor yet, eh?

On the shady side of twenty-eight, replied the other, a tall, slender, dark haired man, the eldest son of old Squire Maywood, as he was universally called.

Well, that's a pretty face I saw; who is it?

Her name is Loyd—Miss Kate Loyd.

Loyd, eh? I don't remember I'm sure, I've such a treacherous memory, and since I returned I find many things have totally escaped my recollection.

It is better to forget some things, said his friend, George Maywood, a slight dash of bitterness tinged his voice.

A teacher, I think you said?

Yes, a wonderful girl. Almost untaught, she has fitted herself for that vocation; putting aside difficulties, that to me, a man, would have seemed insurmountable.

Then she is not wealthy?

Certainly not; far from it, that is, in one sense of the word. Since her father's death, some two years ago, she has supported herself bravely. Her father during his life time, cleared the little cottage in which she keeps her school; so that belongs to her. She has made herself a masterly scholar, both classical and ornamental. I wish you could hear her sing. To my certain knowledge she has been offered fifteen hundred dollars a season, if she would sing in public.

A paragon, I see, said his friend. Loyd! Loyd! what was her father's business?

He was a merchant once, replied George Maywood, turning abruptly round. Come, let's go into the house.

Within doors was a pleasant, happy, social gathering. The bright, particular star of the household, was Nell. Nellie Maywood no longer, but a happy wife and mother. She has made a great match, as the world goes. She sat composedly by the side of her father, who was caressing her youngest child, a bright and blooming creature, with wealth of sunny tresses, and eyes that laughed in sunshine and in shade. A boy, wild with frolic, paced across the room, followed by a pet spaniel. Doctor Longsteel, the husband of Nellie, sat at the piano, playing here and there a few chords of sweet harmony.

George Maywood and the gentleman who had been his college classmate, were busily discussing some little point of opera etiquette, when Dr. Longsteel exclaimed:

Nell, I wish you could sing for me once, as you used to.

Doctor, you know I am almost out of practice, replied the young wife, besides my long walk of to-day has indisposed me. I wish I could favor you, but really, I must be excused.

Isn't it possible for us to get up some singing? asked Harry Wells, their visitor, crossing the room and seating himself by the Doctor's wife.

You and George can sing, she said smilingly. Pray, get George to sing. I haven't heard him for an age, and he used always to be singing.

Ah! Kitty should be here to-night; you should hear Kitty sing, sir, said the aged father.

Suppose we send for her, said George

Maywood, turning towards his father, his face all lighted up. On the opposite side Nellie's eyes flashed almost fire.

No, if you please father, I had rather you would not, she said excitedly.

Ah! is that George's lady-love? asked the young visitor, smilingly.

His! I trust you will never couple his name with hers, Mr. Wells, she exclaimed almost sharply.

I beg your pardon, said the young man, hastily.

Miss Loyd would do no dishonor to the fairest household in the land! exclaimed Maywood, a spot of red tinging each cheek.

She does very well in her place, said Nellie, but we cannot forget that her father was a prison bird.

George Maywood turned deadly pale, gave his sister one piercing glance of mingled anguish and resentment and hurried from the room.

My daughter! my daughter! that was ungenerous; and the old man's tones were tremulous.

Father, said Nellie Longsteel, rising, it was all very well to encourage Kitty Loyd, and to assist her in her efforts every way; but when it comes to taking her into the family, and making her one of us, I must protest against it.

My dear, said Doctor Longsteel, gently, this is worse for your nerves than singing would be. Besides, George may not be thinking of such a thing.

I know he is, replied Nellie, and I cannot look on it with any patience.

Let us talk of something else, my dear, said her husband.

With a fevered brain and hot-beating heart George Maywood had rushed out into the cool night air. With an impatient step he paced the garden walk, unrelenting the gate, throwing it wide, and leaving it to jar itself back; and on he marched, keeping down with a struggle the evil thoughts that strove to be uppermost. Every visit his sister had made, since her marriage, had brought him pain, until he dreaded to hear of her arrival at her childhood's home.

How can she? he thought bitterly—how can she cherish feelings of hate against such an angelic being as sweet Kitty Loyd? If her father had died a convict condemned, in prison, I should still love her.

He came in sight of a pretty little homestead as he walked, but long before the lights from its pleasant parlor could be seen, he heard a voice that sent the wild throatings of love through every pulse.

Clear as a lark-tone it floated out, and upwards, and seemed to draw down some heavenly influence upon the troubled mind of George Maywood. A gentle, sacred, soothing air it was; one that the young girl knew was a great favorite of his, and it calmed his excited brain.

He entered like a privileged visitor, without knocking. With a beautiful welcoming smile she arose to meet him.

You look troubled, she said.

I am troubled; my soul is sorrowful, he added with a sad smile.

Let me sing the dark spirits away, she said, attempting to move to the piano.

No, no; say here, close by me. It is your presence that I want; your presence forever! he added passionately.

Oh! George you know that cannot be.

It can be if you will. My father loves you and I love you; no man could love you more fervently.

But your sister and her proud family. I cannot, cannot consent; she said her face in her hands; the color had faded to a blanching white. I will mix reproach on no man's name; oh, George Maywood, why did you love me? why did you seek me? she cried, a wail of agony in her voice.

Because heaven put the impulse in my heart, said the young man. I have loved you ever since you were a child, Catherine Loyd. Oh, my angel! my beloved—do not reject; do not drive me to anguish.

I have heard how she has spoken of me, said Catherine, in a low troubled voice. Her censures have cut me to the heart, for how could I help it? And do you think I could consent to bring enmity between you and her? to cause dissension where all should be harmony? No, truly as I love you, I cannot disgrace George Maywood.

Then I despair. The young man arose from his seat, but fell back again heavily. His white face and ashen lips alarmed the beautiful girl, who, with tender words and manner, strove to recall him to calmness.

Catherine, I must leave you, he said at last. I must go out of the country. I can no longer remain near one whom I love so hopelessly. If I cannot alter your resolution, I cannot remain.

Give me a week, George; let me think it all over. You must not leave your old father, it would break his heart. Let us say no more about it while you stay, nor again till the expiration of this night week.

George Maywood was obliged to content himself with this promise, and the rest of the evening was pleasantly spent, as circumstances permitted.

Charley, my beautiful darling, don't lean out of the window so far; and almost flying the young mother caught her boy from his perilous position, and held him close to her heart.

Oh! such a pretty lady is coming! cried the boy, pointing to a graceful figure that moment coming up the yard.

Yes, I see; it is Katy Loyd. I wish she would keep away.

What for, mamma? what do you want her to keep away for? Don't you like George like her?

I suppose so, replied his mother shortly; now go and play, but remember, not beyond the garden fence.

Just as the child bounded out, wild with young life, Catherine Loyd glided in. She looked very lovely, her sweet and innocent face flushed by her morning walk.

How do you do? was Nelly Longsteel's cold greeting.

Thank you, quite well; oh, what a beautiful babe! and she gazed delightedly on the sleeping child. Then turning and taking a seat in obedience to Nellie's motion, she said, Mrs. Longsteel, I have come to speak with you about your brother.

Indeed! was Nellie's distant rejoinder. Kate's cheek flushed; her voice trembled so that she came near losing her self-command as she replied:

Yes, in very deed. He told me last night, she continued, that he must leave his beautiful home, his aged father, and go where he perhaps could forget—

Forget you, said Nellie, with some sarcasm in her voice, as Katy's face fell.

Yes, Mrs. Longsteel—forget me; but I shall not let him go.

Ah! then you are determined to come into the family, said Nellie, in an almost harsh voice.

No, Mrs. Longsteel; I shall force myself on no one. I shall go away instead of him, if you still persist in thinking me unworthy to be his wife. I do not blush to own that he is very, very dear to me. He has an old father; the tears came in her eyes; I am fatherless. He has a sister. I am an orphan, unblest with brother or sister. He does love me, purely, nobly, honorably; he would make me his wife; his father would receive me as his daughter; but his sister despises me.

Oh, no; you are mistaken, said Nelly, hastily. I despise no one; but our family name is without stain, while yours, you know—

She ceased. A strange expression gathered in Kate Loyd's pale face.

Take care! she said, in a low excited voice; your children are not grown. Remember that my father's name was once as fair as your own, and his prospects were golden ones. In an evil hour he fell; but he repented and made for himself a virtuous name again. Beware how you pour scorn and contempt on those whom God pities. He will surely remember it. Do not fear for me, Mrs. Longsteel; until you look upon me as your equal! but until you acknowledge that, do not fear that I shall cause your cheeks to redden at the mention of my name. I will go away where he cannot find me; I can support myself, thank God. Good morning, Mrs. Longsteel.

She passed out as she had come, only she left shadows behind her.

I will walk on the river bank, she said, softly, where we have so often walked together; it may be the last time. She hastened towards the stream, fringed with over-drooping alders and willow trees. Once she thought, in the midst of her sad reverie, a sunny head flashed in and out, down where the stream curved a little, and the trees were thicker than elsewhere. But plunged in sorrowful thought, she did not take much notice, until a girlish scream sounded on her ears. Flying to the spot, she saw the beautiful son of Dr. Longsteel, not a yard from the shore, struggling as he came up from his fall; his hair was plastered to his temples; his little hands raised in agony. Seizing a stout overhanging branch of the willow tree directly over the spot, the brave girl jumped in, caught the drowning boy, worked herself back with great labor and clambered out of the water, the boy hanging lifeless from under one arm.

At that very moment the Doctor appeared; he had been searching for his boy. He gave a cry of astonishment, and exclamations of fervent thanksgiving.

My dear girl! God bless you! he exclaimed, his lips quivering, but for you, my child had perished.

He is safe now, sir, said Kate, transferring her dripping charge to the arms of the doctor.

You are wet through, cried the doctor; come immediately to the house.

I can walk home, and—

No; to the house as soon as possible! said the doctor, in his quick, professional way, and Kate followed, her garments clinging to her.

As they entered, Nellie came flying down stairs.

Doctor! husband! what has happened? she cried. Oh, he is dead! who was it? who killed him? and wringing her hands she stood the picture of despair.

Hush, Nell, he lives! he is breathing! but for this noble girl, however, our darling might be lying dead in the river.

Oh, did you save him, Katy Loyd? was it you saved the life of my darling? Come up stairs with me, quickly, come; and clutching her arm, the two followed the doctor and his charge.

Nellie hastily spread dry clothes, and Kate attended herself in them.

She took me out, cried the boy pointing to his preserver. He laid yet on his couch; his mother wiping the long, wet curls one by one, with a soft towel.

Yes, darling, said his mother, impressing a kiss on the white brow.

Ask her if she can forgive your mother.

Can you forgive my mother? asked the dear boy, artlessly.

Nellie looked up—arose, cried with one wild sob.

O, Katy Loyd, forgive me! and fell weeping on her neck.

It is needless to say that Kate forgave; that George Maywood was rendered supremely happy; that old Squire Maywood thanked God that his son would be blessed with the love of one whom he had long regarded as his daughter, and that the whole family, thereafter, cherished the gentle girl, looking upon her with more affection and reverence than usually follow those who enter within the circle of other homes.

Old Hundred.

If it be true that Luther composed that tune, and if the worship of mortals is carried on the wings of angels to Heaven, how often has he heard the declaration, "They are singing Old Hundred now." The solemn strain carries us back to the times of the Reformer—Luther and his devoted band. He, doubtless, was the first to strike the grand old chords in the public sanctuary of his own Germany. From his stentorian lungs, rolled the notes, vibrating not through vaulted cathedral roof, but along a grandeur arch—the eternal heavens. He wrought into each note his own sublime faith, and stamped it with that faith's immortality. Hence it cannot die. Neither men nor angels will let it pass into oblivion.

Can you find a tomb in the land where sealed lips lie that have not sung that tune? If they were gray old men, they had heard or sung "Old Hundred." If they were babies, they smiled as their mother rocked them to sleep, singing "Old Hundred." Sinner and saint have joined with endless congregations where it has, with and without the feeling organ, sounded on the sacred air.

The dear little children, looking with wondering eyes on this strange world have listened to it. The sweet young girl, whose tombstone told of sixteen summers—she whose pure, innocent face haunted you with its mild beauty—loved "Old Hundred," and she sang it, closed her eyes, and seemed communing with the angels who were soon to claim her. He whose manhood was devoted to the service of God, and he who with the white hand placed over his laboring breast, loved "Old Hundred," and though sometimes his lips only move, way down in his heart, so to cease its throbs, the holy melody was sounding. The dear, white-haired old father, with his tremulous voice, how he loved "Old Hundred." Do you see him now, sitting in the venerable arm-chair, his hands crossed over the head of his cane, his silver locks floating off from his hallowed temples, and a tear stealing down his care-worn, furrowed cheeks, that thin, quivering, faltering sound, now bursting forth, now listening for in vain? If you do not, we do; and from such lips, hallowed by four-score years' service in the Master's cause, "Old Hundred" sounds indeed a sacred melody.

You may find your choir with Sabbath prima donnas, whose daring notes emulate the steeple and cost as much—but give us the simple tones of the Lutheran hymn, sung by old and young together. Martyrs have hallowed it; it has gone up from the bed of the saints. The old churches, where generation after generation have worshipped, and where many scores of the dear dead have been carried and laid before the altar, where they gave themselves to God, seem to breathe of "Old Hundred" from vestibule to tower top; the air is haunted with its spirit.

Think a moment of the assembled company who have at different times and in different places joined in the familiar tune. Throng upon throng; the strong, the timid, the gentle, the brave, the beautiful, the rapt faces, all beating with inspiration of the heavenly sounds.

"Old Hundred!" king of the sacred band of "ancient airs!" Never shall our ears grow weary of hearing, or our tongues of singing, thee. And when we get to Heaven, who knows but what the first triumphal strains that welcome us may be—

"Be thou, O God, exalted high."

The Manufacture of Wines.

Every day adds to the accumulating evidence that pure wines are very rare indeed; that those who use such beverages have no guarantee, as they sip their champagne, claret, burgundy or port, that they are not imbibing a cunning compound of logwood, sugar, chemicals and cider, or distilled liquors, or, under the most favorable circumstances, a very poor wine "cooked" to suit the palate.

On this subject the London correspondent of the National Intelligencer sheds some light. He says:

"At the northwestern corner of the Mediterranean, on the Gulf of Lyons, stands the prosperous little town of Chte. Its harbor is usually crowded with vessels bearing the flags of many nations. The warehouses are numerous, the stores commodious, and there is little or no appearance of either indigence or idleness in the place; yet a stranger is at first puzzled to determine what is the particular business or trade of the town. It seems scarcely credible that any respectable person should be without a hammer; yet we have known genteel families, whose sole dependence for that indispensable article was on borrowing it from their neighbors. And when the hammer was obtained, there were, perhaps, no nails in the house; at least none of the requisite size.

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

Apologetic. The communication of our "Boston Correspondent" was received at so late an hour that we were reluctantly obliged to lay it over until our next issue. We regret this, as its interesting articles are always welcome, and its non-appearance will be a disappointment to a large class of our readers.

Town Meeting. At a meeting of the inhabitants of this town last Tuesday afternoon, John A. Green was chosen Moderator, and the following business transacted:

Voted, To authorize the Treasurer with the Selectmen, to borrow a sum of money not exceeding twenty thousand dollars, at five per cent. interest, to pay a part of the Town Debt.

Chase Urbane Cadworth, Pound Keeper, in place of Ebenezer Adams, resigned.
Close Seth Crane, Fence Viewer, in place of Ebenezer Adams, resigned.
The meeting was then dissolved.

Boston Theatre. The attractions at this most popular place of amusement in Boston, this afternoon, as appears by the notice in our advertising columns, are of the highest order, and richly worth a visit to the city to witness the performances.

Acknowledgments. We are under obligations to Nathaniel White, Esq. of this town, for a beautiful supply of excellent Aspirin, raised in his garden, under his direction, and the best quality we have tasted this season; truly a treat, which we highly appreciate.

We had also a feast of new potatoes, (Berendse) direct from the South, furnished by an esteemed friend, Mr. Seth Crane, or as he is familiarly known, "Yankee Seth," for which kindness, on this and other occasions, he merits our special thanks.

Under this enumeration, we cannot forget the one attention of Mr. Ozias M. Pope, and we have recorded him a "friend in need."

Fire. The alarm of yesterday was caused by a fire in the woods near the residence of Frederic A. Lapham.

Union Congregational Society. We learn that a religious society, under the above name, consisting of about fifty members, was, on Thursday last, incorporated in this town, in accordance with the provisions of the Statutes of this Commonwealth.

Summer Hats for men and boys; a good assortment, embracing every variety of style, quality and color; from the cheapest Palm Leaf, at ten cents, to the fine Leghorns and Panamas, of every style can be fitted and suited at C. Gill & Co's.

A Word of Encouragement. Dr. Stocking, No. 19 Tremont Row, has a very successful method of curing and filling aching teeth, that makes them useful for many years. The operation is painless, therefore the timid have nothing to fear.

A cough is made easier to invade by the external application of "My Mother's SALVE" to the lungs; and diseased lungs may be cured by its use. See advertisement.

Another New Clothing Store. Mr. Russell, so long and favorably known to our citizens as the enterprising proprietor of the Town Hall Clothing Store, after a years absence, in a prospecting visit to the far West, has recently returned, and resumed his business at that central location, lately occupied by Mr. Arnold, on Temple Street, where he will be happy to meet his former friends and patrons, and receive any order which they may be pleased to favor him with for articles in his line. His large and new stock of goods, bought at first cost, will enable him to sell, he says, by the yard, or made up into garments in a workmanlike and most fashionable manner, at the lowest tariff prices. Read his advertisement in another column, and see if it will not be for your interest to make him a call.

Benefactors of the Age. It always gives us pleasure to lend our aid to those that try to make others happy around them. And, as our young friends, Loud & Veazie, are truly of this stamp, and have taken particular pains in fitting up tasteful rooms, and in satisfying the inner wants of man with their cool, delicious, and ever-admired ice creams, we would say, go one and all, and partake of this luxury.

C. Gill & Co. have just made such additions to their assortment of men and boys' Cloth Caps as will make it a very desirable lot to select from.

For the Patriot.

Snobocracy Rampant.

Mr. Editor: The writer has travelled in many lands and seen a good many kinds of people, but fate had reserved for him to witness last Monday evening, in the town of Quincy, at the Concert in Johnson's Hall, the most brilliant exhibition of snobocracy, and the most perfect specimen of the genius snob. This we found in the accomplished gentleman who acted as ticket-seller, door-keeper, and audience selector of the aforesaid Concert, and we must congratulate the gentleman on his very appreciative discrimination. I do not know whether vulgarity, rudeness and ill-manners, are necessary accomplishments of a snobocratic door-keeper; but we protest against the exhibition of these accomplishments to respectable women—even if they happen to be poor; we protest against a respectable woman being told that she cannot be admitted, when she presented a proper ticket, even though she be a "help;" and we protest, too, against a cleanly clad young man accompanying his sister to the Concert, having his ticket taken from him, and turned into the street—merely because he wore overalls instead of broadcloth; all of which was done by the door-keeper aforesaid.

We are told that concerts cannot be given publicly in the town of Quincy, if poor and plain clad citizens are admitted. We don't believe it. The statement is a disgrace to the rich, and an insult to those who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. Such a criterion eliminates a principle, that the common sense of the community should crush out, the moment any attempt is made to practise it; and, assuredly, no gentleman or lady, worthy of the name, will ever attempt to do so.

We protest, Mr. Editor, in the name of outraged humanity, against broadcloth and satin, or even worldly wealth, being the "open sesame" to a concert—yes to a public concert—for it was nothing else, disguise their snobbery as they may. We protest, too, against the vile insinuation, that people clad in homey garb cannot be admitted to concerts for fear of rows; for we know that rowdiness and rascality is more frequently clothed in broadcloth than in serge; so much is this the truth—that rascality, if only big enough—by one of the most wonderful transmutations of human sympathy, is elaborated into heroism.

Though a very humble individual, Mr. Editor, we confess, like many of our class, to a fondness for concerts. We love to listen to those sweet strains, that can "soothe the savage breast." And, it is just we, therefore, whose breasts are savage, that ought to have the privilege of listening to them. But snobbery, in the plenitude of its refinement, would keep that privilege to itself. We do not object to any person or persons getting up a private concert, for the amusement of themselves and friends—but we do object to being wheedled into buying some half dozen tickets, and giving our countenance to a principle we detest, under what we must call false pretences. Let us hope, therefore, that the next time the snobbery of this good old town, should condescend to get up a concert, they will be a little more charitable towards us homely clothed sons and daughters of toil; and that above all, that they will select a door-keeper who can at least be civil to those who are to be excluded; and who shall not basely seek to justify his insolent rudeness by the subsequent perpetration of unmitigated falsehoods.

To Correspondents. Several articles already in type, will appear in our next.

late of Quincy, in said County, Bootmaker, deceased, respectfully represents, that the said deceased had at the time of his death, Real Estate, consisting of a Lot of Land with the Buildings thereon, situated in said Quincy, and bounded as follows, to-wit:—Southerly and Easterly on land of heirs of Edmund Marsh, Westerly on Hancock Street, and Northerly on land of A. W. Russell, of the value of $3500, and that the lawful claims against the Estate of said deceased, for just debts, including funeral expenses, amount to $4377; and that the value of the Personal Property applicable to the payment of the said claims is $—, being insufficient by the sum of $4377 to satisfy said claims; and that the persons interested in the Estate of said deceased, as devisees, or otherwise, are Sarah Marsh; Abigail H. Prescott, wife of Abram Prescott; Harriet E. Waldron, Wm. G. Prescott, Lyman R. Prescott, George W. Prescott, and Henrietta Marsh of said Quincy. The said Executors therefore pray that they may be licensed and empowered to sell and convey so much of the Real Estate of said deceased as will produce said sum of $4377.

NORFOLK ss. Probate Office, May 10, A.D. 1859

UPON the petition of W. G. Prescott and George W. Prescott, Executors of the Will of late of Quincy, in said County, Bootmaker, deceased, praying that they may be licensed to sell and convey certain Real Estate of said deceased.

MOSES R. MARSH,

ORDERED.—That the said Executors notify all persons interested in the Estate of said deceased, to appear at a Court of Probate to be holden at Roxbury, in said County, on the Twenty-eighth day of MAY, A.D. 1859, at two o'clock in the afternoon, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said Petition should not be granted, by publishing an attested copy of said Petition, with this Order thereon, three weeks successively in the newspaper, called the Quincy Patriot, printed at Quincy.

GEORGE WHITE, Judge of Probate and Insolvency.
Quincy, May 14. 3w

To the Honorable Judge of Probate and Insolvency, for the County of Norfolk.

THE Petition of George Marsh, Administrator of the Will annexed, of late of Quincy, in said County, Bootmaker, deceased, respectfully represents that the said Edmund Marsh was for many years a copartner in business with and as Moses R. Marsh, and at the time of his decease was the surviving partner, the said Moses R. Marsh having previously deceased, and that the said copartners held as partnership property, certain Real Estate consisting of a tract of land, on the easterly side of Hancock street, in said Quincy, and measuring forty-seven feet on said street; bounded Northerly by land of which M. R. Marsh died seized measuring ninety feet on said line; Easterly by land of which Edmund Marsh died seized and measuring ninety feet on said line; and Westerly by land of which M. R. Marsh died seized and measuring forty-seven feet on said line and line measuring thereon, of the value of $700, and that the lawful claims against the Estate of said copartnership for just debts, amount to $1566 34, and that the value of their Personal Estate is $103 47, being insufficient by the sum of 1462 87 to satisfy said claims, and that the persons interested in the Estate as heirs or otherwise are Mary Marsh, widow, and Edmund S. Marsh heir at law of said Edmund Marsh, and the Creditors of said Moses R. Marsh, deceased. The said Administrator therefore prays that he may be licensed and empowered to sell and convey so much of said Real Estate as will produce said sum of 1462 87.

EDMUND MARSH,

GEORGE MARSH, Administrator.

Poetry.

The Heroes of the Revolution.

They sleep, the true and brave,
Their last and dreamless sleep;
Yet with remembrance o'er each grave
Hath sacred vigil keep.
Freely their blood was poured,
Freely their lives were given—
The noblest sacrifice to earth,
The holiest to heaven.

For freedom and for right,
Those valiant heroes bled,
Struggling on bravely through the gloom
By dark oppression shrouded.
Cheered on by no reward,
Which they might e'er possess;
Their only hope that freedom's light
Might future ages bless.

Pure and devoted souls!
Thou long and weary years,
The seed from which our blessings sprang,
Thy sword to pain and tears.
And while we reap in joy,
Shall we not mind their trials o'er
With pride and fond regret?

Yes! all the world shall know
That we the names revere,
Of those who suffered death, that we
No tyrant's claim might fear.
Here on the very soil,
Where oft our sires have met,
Beneath that ash tree's whispering boughs;
Where boughs are whispering yet.

We would a lasting Monument
To their best memory rear,
That all may know that heroes' names
To patriot hearts are dear.

The Plague of a Baby.

I've got a little baby, sir,
And happy I should be
If I were not for the trouble, sir,
That baby is to me.
I once could pass my time at home,
While everything was still;
But now there's always something wrong,
Or baby's doing ill!

And if, for quietude and peace,
I pass an hour away,
You'd think, when I got back again,
"The devil was to pay."
And if I, sick with worryment,
Go on a harmless frolic;
My wife she gets her tantrums up,
And baby get the colic!

At midnight, shivering, I must sit,
And hold it on my lap,
While wife prepares a fire, and makes,
"The little monster's pop!"
And when I'm in most need of rest,
"I'm sure to be the worse!"
And all the longer I must play,
The part of patient nurse.

Sore as'er was mortal man before
I met with my little one,
And want of all, this rightly too,
Has given me the colic!
O, then my friend, take good advice—
Don't lay it on the shelf—
Be wifely, be kind with what you have,
And baby be yourself!

What Man is Poor.

What man is poor? Not he whose brow
Is bathed in heaven's own light,
Whose knees alone to God do bow
At morning and at night;
Whose arm is raised by faithful toil,
Who sits beneath the tree,
Or treads upon the fruitful soil,
With spirit calm and free.

What man is poor? Not he who loves Sweet nature's dearest lot;
Through toil and want who nobly proves
Her temperance is his lot;
With cheerful look and happy heart,
Who treads life's varied way,
While to his soul her truths impart
Full many a sunny ray.

What man is poor? Not he whose brow
Is wreathed with heaven's own dew,
Who breathes to God a heartfelt vow,
Whose pledge is strong and true;
The morning calls his active feet
To no exchanging duties,
But evening and the twilight sweet
Shall light his pathway home.

Anecdotes.

An outside passenger on a coach had his hat blown over a bridge into the stream.
True to nature, said a gentleman who was seated beside him, a beaver naturally takes to the water.

What makes you look so glum, Tom?
Oh, I have had to endure a sad trial to my feelings.
What on earth was it?
Why, I had to tie on a pretty girl's bonnet while her ma was looking on.

A well-known author once wrote an article in Blackwood, signed "A S."
Tut, said Jerrold, on reading the initials, what a pity he will only tell two thirds of the truth!

The friends of a celebrated wit expressed some surprise that, with his age and fondness for the bottle, he should have thought it necessary to marry.

A wife was necessary, he said; my acquaintances began to say that I drank too much for a single man.

A political novice rose to make his first speech, and, in embarrassment, began to scratch his head.

Well, really, exclaimed one of his opponents, I am beginning to think he has got something in his head after all.

Did you vote yesterday, Michael?
Sure I did, according to the instructions?
An' what were the instructions?
Didn't you hear them?—vote early and often.

If you want to know whether a tree is hollow or not, axe it.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, May 26th, 1859.

Anniversary Week in Boston.—Anti-Slavery Convention; Speeches—Convention of the Methodists—Universalists—Congregational-denominations—Method Society—Separation of the American Tract Society—
Public Sentiment in Boston.—Trade—
European Matters.—No Battle yet—England on Neutral ground.—California's decline in Business.

Since Monday, our city has been filled with strangers and visitors from all parts of New England, attending the religious and other anniversaries. And although the meetings for the most part have been unusually dull and little excitement manifested, they have certainly brought together
a great number of outsiders, whose very appearance at first sight would indicate that they come from rural districts, where the latest Parisian fashions have not yet been promulgated. We dropped in at two different days to the New England anti-Slavery Convention, held in Mercantile Hall, opposite the Post Office, in Summer street, and listened to spicy speeches from Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Edmund Quincy, Parker
 Pillsbury, Mr. Foster, and others. The remarks made by these gentlemen, were radical in the extreme, and not very complimentary to any organization, civil, political or theological, but theirs. Mr. Foster in the course of his long speech, deploring the decline of Abolitionism, gave the Democratic and Republican parties a severe flagellation;
affirming that the latter was a greater enemy
to the anti-Slavery cause than the former.
He was severe on Henry Ward Beecher,
Dr. Cheever, Giddings of Ohio, General
Wilson, Governor Banks, and others. General Wilson was in attendance both days at this crowded Convention, and evidently listened to these complacent over the left,
with much amusement, judging from the frequent smiles that overspread his radiant countenance. Mr. Quincy took strong ground in favor of disunion—practically or by force—which I was sorry to hear from a mind so gifted, and a heart ever warm in the cause of philanthropy. A large sprinkling of the Convention was composed of females,
who were deeply interested in its proceedings.

The meetings of the Universalists have been very pleasant and for the most part announced. From their reports this religious order is in a very flourishing condition. The State has lately granted to Tufts' College fifty thousand dollars on condition that the same amount should be raised by subscription as an endowment; which from reports
of committees is likely to be realized.
The Unitarians have had pleasant gatherings, particularly at the annual festival in Music Hall. The speeches made on the occasion, were humorous and racy, and often "called down the house."

The Massachusetts Medical Society held their annual meeting here on Wednesday,
and wound up as usual by a good dinner at Faneuil Hall. The speech of the venerable Dr. James Jackson at the dinner-table, was very fine and appropriate; he is one of the few men in our body politic that never says
a foolish thing.
The anniversary meetings of the Methodists, the Congregationalists and other religious denominations have been fully attended, and some of their proceedings were quite interesting. In many cases the anti-Slavery element has been touched, always producing exciting and at times angry disputation.
The Slavery question has led this week, to the complete dismemberment of the Tract Society; they having resolved at the Old

South Chapel on Monday last, to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." Hereafter there are to be two American Tract Societies; one—the original Tract Society—whose head quarters are to be in Boston, holding no fellowship with slaveholders; the other in New York, which embraces the whole world—manus, the slave States—and believes in Christian benevolence towards all men, except those who have African blood in their veins. The separation was made without open war. In the religious world it is an event of some importance.

Taking the week through, it may be regarded as the most pleasant week in the year, by reason of the anniversaries; called by some the holy week—the feast of the tabernacles. The gathering of men from all religious sects, and the interest manifested in their Conventions in different parts of our city, show what the public sentiment is in Boston on moral and religious matters.

Business continues fair, but with great fluctuation in prices; and money on good paper is as abundant as ever, with low rates
of interest.

We have European news to the 14th of May. There has been no fighting yet. Napoleon had reached Genoa, where he was well received by the Italians, and issued a stirring address to his army.

England had formally proclaimed her neutrality. So it seems she means to keep aloof from war, so long as she is able.

We have intelligence from California to the 5th inst. The steamer brings two millions of dollars in treasure to New York.
There seems to be a loose spoke somewhere
in the business community of California.
Stagnation existed in all branches of trade,
and prices rated low. This gloomy state of business was regarded as temporary, and a decided reaction was anticipated to take place immediately.

The Quiet Home.

What dear, quiet little things Mrs. Bird's children are! said a lady to a friend. I called to see Mrs. Bird, to-day, and found her in the nursery with her two boys and two girls,
about the ages of mine. It would have done your heart good to see how sweetly they behaved. Perfect little gentlemen and ladies they were. I felt really discouraged. Mine!
why they are wild asses, colts in comparison.
There is a great difference in children,
replied the friend. I know some little boys and girls that Mrs. Bird would not find so easily subdued.

I could hardly credit my own eyes; but,
as they say, seeing is believing. resumed the first speaker. For more than half an hour I sat and talked with Mrs. Bird, in the nursery, without once being disturbed by any noise or any of the unpleasant interruptions, incident
to presence of children.

What were they doing? asked the other in some surprise.

That was the most remarkable of all.
Mrs. Bird has four children. Willy is the oldest, just in his tenth year. Meeta is seven, Agnes five, and the baby, as they call Andrew, nearly four. Just the ages for thoughtless, mischief-making, troublesome, noisy naps. But they were as still as mice in a cheese. She had them all doing something. Willy she had taught various kinds of netting, and ornamental needle-work. It was a wonderful resource for the child, keeping his thoughts and fingers busy, and both out of mischief. She showed me a handsome anti-macassar, in crochet, which he had just finished. I'm sure that I couldn't have done it better. I could not help looking upon the delicately formed, sweet-faced boy, as he sat earnestly engaged at his work;
he was embroidering a pair of slippers in Berlin wool for his father—and contrasting
him with my Tom, a great rude, coarse boy,
dirty rough hands, that are always in a better condition for grasping a wheelbarrow than plying a needle. And the comparison, I assure you, was not made without a sigh.

Did the boy look happy? inquired the friend.
Perfectly so. He wanted no amusement besides his books and his needle-work. You could not drive him into the street, his mother
said.
Dear little fellow! What a comfort to have such a child.
Isn't it? It really did me good to look into his sweet, pure face, so girlish and delicate.

I should like to understand Mrs. Bird's system, for there must be art in the case.
All children are born romps.

I began early, said she to me, and represented all rudeness and disorder. It is the mind that governs in children as in men. You must give this the right direction. Mere noise making I never permitted. Boys, it is said, grasp a hammer and pound intensely.
I think, in most cases, they pound because it is given to them. Try them with the sweet face and fragile form of a baby doll, and you will rarely see an inclination to pound. I commenced with the doll, not the hammer;

and you see the result. Willy is as gentle as a girl. He never throws the house into disorder; never makes discordant noises;
never quarrels with or teases his younger brother or sisters. So with the rest. I began right, you see; and upon right beginning everything depends. My husband is a home-loving, order-loving, quiet-loving man; and I make it my business to see that home is all that he desires. How much I enjoy my home—it is so quiet—so orderly! During the first year of our marriage, Mr. Bird often said this. I had seen other homes, I was familiar with, the way in which young children were permitted to destroy all comfort in a household by their noise and disorder; and I made up my mind to have things different.
If children came to our house. And they are different, as you can see. And the children themselves are much happier. I keep them busy at something from morning till night; busy enough not to think of eating all the while. This germinalizing among children is dreadful. It makes mere gluttons of them, developing the animal, and repress-ing the intellectual. It is this ravenous eating that renders them coarse, rude and cruel,
like wild beasts.

I believe Mrs. Bird is more than half right was remarked upon this. I have often said that children were permitted to eat over-much. Mine would stuff themselves like Christmas turkeys, from morning till night, if not restricted.

Employment, such as Mrs. Bird provides for her children, is certainly the best correc-tor for the habit of eating.

How did she get along with the baby, Andrew—the little four-year-old, you mentioned; was he as orderly and silent as the rest?

He was poring over a picture-spelling-book for most of the time that I was there, and afterwards occupied himself with stringing beads. I declare it was all a wonder to me.
Such a charming family of children I have never seen elsewhere. What a change there would be for the better if all mothers understood and practised on Mrs. Bird's system!

Better for heaven, it may be, said the friend equivocally.

For heaven; I don't just see your meaning. Such children are most too good to live.

Oh! Mrs. Bird's quiet home may be very pleasant, and her system of government very beautiful—but there is danger.

Of what? That her children will not live.

Why? Because they are too good for this earth, as you have just intimated?

I am not sure that they are really any better in heart than some less orderly and more boisterous children. What I mean is, that Mrs. Bird's system depresses the animal forces, leaving the bodies of her children more liable to disease and less able to resist an attack when it comes.

They are less exposed than other children.
Perhaps so. But for my part, on reflection,
I would rather take the chances of a less orderly system of house management—
mine, for instance, a little modified; noisy,
and like a bedlam, as the house often is.

It was on the evening of this very day that Mr. Bird said to his wife, as if the subject was suddenly forced upon his observation.

I don't think our children have strong constitutions. Willy's face is too delicate for the face of a boy, and his body too slender.

I observe, also, that his shoulders are depressed. Hark!

Both listened for a few moments.

I don't just like that cough, said Mr. Bird.
A little cold remarked his wife. Willy got his feet wet to-day.

I never saw children with such indifferent appetites, said Mr. Bird; they don't eat enough to keep pigeons alive.

Most children eat too much, was the reply; and more children are made sick from over feeding than abstinence.

But there is a golden mean, said Mr. Bird.
To reach it has been my study. Do not fear. The children eat quite as much as is good for them.

There it is again! I don't like that cough at all. And Mr. Bird arose and went up to the room where the children were sleeping. Willy's cheeks were slightly flushed—his skin was dry and above natural heat—and his respiration just enough obstructed to make it audible. He stood for some moments looking down upon his sleeping boy.

There's nothing the matter with him.
Even as Mrs. Bird said this Willy coughed again, and as he coughed he raised his hand to his throat and moaned as if in suffering.

Willy! Willy, dear!
I wouldn't disturb him, said Mrs. Bird.
The father's voice had penetrated his halfawakened sense, and opening his eyes, he looked up with a wondering glance.

Are you sick, Willy?

The boy coughed again, and more convul-
sively, pressing his hand to his chest.
Does it hurt you to cough?
Yes.

Where?
It hurts me right here, his hand remaining where he had placed it a moment before.

The panting of the child showed that there was constriction of the lungs.

I'm going for the doctor—Mr. Bird spoke aside to his wife.

I hardly think it necessary, objected the mother. It is only some slight disturbance from cold, and will pass away. This sudden waking has quickened his heart beat.

Usually, Mr. Bird deferred to his wife in all matters relating to the children, though his judgment did not always coincide with her discipline. But he was too well satisfied Willy required a physician now to hesitate a moment on the mother's objection. So he went away in haste.

The physician was far from treating the case indifferently. His practised eye recognized the symptoms of an acute pneumonia,
and his treatment was such as to fill the hearts of the parents with sudden fear.

If the boy had any constitution. It was on the fifth day, and the physician replying to an anxious enquiry made by the distressed mother, all of whose fears were excited. If the boy had any constitution, I could speak
all the encouragement your heart desires.
He is a hot house plant. All the vital forces are but feebly reactive.

His health has always been good, doctor, interposed Mrs. Bird.

He has never before had any serious sickness; but he lacks physical stamina, for all that.

The doctor's words sent a shuddering chill
to the mother's heart; while a faint conviction of error dawned upon her mind.

Too surely were the physician's fears realized. At the end of ten anxious days it was apparent to every one that Willy's hours were numbered. The disease, preying upon a body which had been denied pure and invigorating sunshine, found scarcely anything to oppose its destructive advances. There was no power of resistance in that delicate frame. Without even a struggle for life the contest ended.

In less than a week after the death of Willy there came another summons for the doctor. He found the sorrowing parents in alarm again. Little Andrew, the baby, was sick. Sure throat—fever—stupor.

He hadn't been out anywhere, said Mrs.
Bird, for two weeks. Her meaning was, that having remained in the house during that period, it was impossible for him to have contracted any contagious disease.

It would have been better if you had sent him out every day.

The doctor's words were more an utterance of his own thoughts than a remark to Mrs. Bird. Dear little Andrew! He was a slender, matured, beautiful child, who attracted every eye. His pale, spiritual face, almost shadowed by his broad forehead,
gave promise of an intellectual manhood—if ever it be reached. But there was the question which forced itself upon every one but his unwise parents, who, in securing a quiet household, were providing for a deeper quiet
of death and destruction.

Delicate, orderly, loving, beautiful children, grew up in the stimulating atmosphere of their home, but without strength for the life-battle.

Andrew, the baby, was carried out by the mourners in less than a week from the time when the doctor sat down by the bed in which he lay, and placed his fingers on the quick wire pulse that sent a warning of death
to his heart.

Our children have no constitution, said
Mr. Bird, sadly, as he gazed with dim eyes upon the two delicate blossoms that remained to shed their fragrance in his quiet home.

They have always been healthy, answered
the mother, in mournful tones.

The doctor says that we should give them
more fresh air, and a great deal of out-door exercise.

Jane takes them out to walk every day,
but I don't see that it does them any good.

Agnes always comes home tired and fretful;
Meeta took cold to-day. Neither of them are as well or as happy after these walks as
when they remain in the house.

No wonder they were tired and fretful, or showed symptoms of cold, after these daily recreations in the open air. Holding each the hand of their attendant, they would walk slowly as nuns, and orderly as charity children in a procession. There was no hop, skip and jump—no impulsive start or merry
romp—but a strict observance of the last maternal injunction—

Now walk along, like good quiet children.

Weariness, after such attempted recreations in the open air, was an inevitable result; weariness and something worse. The outside air was different from the air of their home. It was colder and more humid. To meet this, and derive a benefit instead of sustaining an injury, there must be a quicker

circulation and increased bodily warmth.

More addition of clothing would not accomplish the desired object. There must be quicker movements of the body—vigorous exercise—producing increased vital action.

Daily, these half-dead-and-alive walks were continued, and daily, the children came back from them wearied and spiritless, and sometimes with hot hands and feverish breath.

The mother insisted upon it that these daily walks were not good for the children.
Mr. Bird, in doubt, called upon their doctor and submitted the question anew.

Give them plenty of fresh air and out-of-door exercise! was his repeated and very emphatic injunction. If you wish to raise your children let them have a chance to acquire strength.

And so the daily goings out were continued,
whether the air was dry or damp, warm or chilling. If it was warm, the children came back wearied; if damp, with symptoms of cold; and always in some way showing a loss of, instead of an increased, vital activity.

They were too well trained, at five or seven,
to commit the indiscretion of a romp in the street, and romping in the quiet house they call their home was a thing never known or heard of by either the little patterns of propriety. As to vocal efforts, they rarely ever went beyond a low humming, 'Hush-a-baby,' sung to a waxed-faced doll. No wild, screaming laughter ever desecrated the temple-like stillness of Mrs. Bird's dwelling, unless from the lungs of some badly trained,
visiting child, upon whose strange doings her own little ones gazed in half stupid wonder.

Narrow chests and weak lungs were the natural consequence.

As Willy had died, so died—ere the summer's greenness had faded from the new made graves on the first departed—Meeta
next to him in years.

Only Agnes was left to the stricken parents now. She was pure, and white, and delicate as a lily. That Meeta had been injured by the daily walks in the open air they were fully convinced; and notwithstanding the repeated remonstrance of the family physician, they refused to let the fresh breath of heaven in upon their child.

One day—it was a sunny visitant in the early spring time, ere the violet opens its blue eyes among the fresh shooting grass.
Agnes strayed from the nursery, and, going beyond the watchful eyes of her mother,
gained an open chamber window, and climbing on a chair, looked out upon the budding trees of the emerald carpet which Nature had spread over the small plot of open ground in front of the dwelling. The window looked to the south, and the air came pressing in from that quarter, bathing the child's brow with a refreshing coolness. She had her slender arms upon the window sill, and, resting her face upon her arms, looked out half dreamily, and with a quiet sense of pleasure.
When her mother found her half an hour
afterwards she was asleep.

A robust child might have suffered from some temporary derangement of the system consequent on checked perspiration; but to one of Agnes's feeble constitution exposure
like this must always be followed with serious consequences. When Mrs. Bird caught Agnes in her arms a wild fear throbbled in her heart. Alas! it was no idle fear. She soon detected symptoms too well understood,
and sent in haste for the doctor.

Some slight derangement, he said, evasively, to the eager questionings of the mother. But his tones were a death knell.

Very, very quiet now is the home of Mr.
and Mrs. Bird. There is no wild disorder of children there, but a stillness that makes the heart ache. Mrs. Bird resolved, in the beginning, to have a quiet, orderly home, and she has done her work well.

Noises in the Sick Room.

It is extraordinary how many persons, unused to the sick room, mistake certain noise
for quiet. When such people have to walk across the room they do so with a balancing sort of movement that makes every plank creak uneasily. Their very dress rattles in a way that would make the fortune of a rattlesnake.

If anything has to be said, it is spoken in a loud whispering, which conceals the words
but makes the most irritating of noises.

Now the silence of a sick room must not be labored, it must be natural. Shoes that do not creak must be worn, and in walking the foot must be put down carefully, of course,
but with a firm step, that comes gently, yet readily, on the floor. This will not make the creaking sound by the toe-pointed gin-gerly mode of movement so much adopted by those whose experience of sick rooms is small. The dress must be made of some noiseless material, wool or cotton; silk must be avoided, for it squeaks with every movement. In speaking, the pitch of the voice must be slightly lowered, and the words instead of being hissed, as in whispering, should be clipped short, and cut distinctly. By this means, the person spoken to will hear what is said, while the least possible sound accompanies the word.—Barrett's Cure of the Sick.

MAMMOTH CIRCUS

MAMMOTH CIRCUS

From Niles' Garden, New York, and the Boston Theatre.

THE LARGEST,
BEST EQUIPPED, AND IN ALL RESPECTS THE MOST MAGNIFICENT EQUESTRIAN ESTABLISHMENT EXTANT.

Please observe the day and date!

QUINCY,
Wednesday, June 8th.

On the morning of the day of Exhibition
MADAME MASON,
(late of Astley's Amphitheatre, London),
THE ONLY FEMALE EQUESTRIAN DRIVER IN THE WORLD.

Attached to Niles' establishment has been carefully selected from the principal equestrian establishments of all nations, with an especial regard to securing people who had the merit of giving new and original performances. Among the most prominent of the stars will be found

THE TROUPE
Educated Bull, DON JUAN,
who under the control of his owner and trainer, Señor Pedro Gonzalez, the famous matador of Madrid, will go through a series of feats which baffles description. Nothing of the kind has heretofore been witnessed except in a few of the principal cities of Spain.

By universal consent of the public and the press ac-knowledgeed to be the most astonishing rider that has ever lived.

Mr. W. W. NICHOLS,
The wonderful backward rider, is another star of the first magnitude. Quite different in his style from Melville, and with altogether a distinct series of feats, his performances cannot fail to excite the special admiration of all.

4 Unapproachable Clowns,
Will furnish food for merriment, each of whom is a host
in his vocation.

DAN COSTELLO!
The Humorous, Wit and Saltiest, as well as a wonderful leaper and vaulter.

THOMAS LENTON!
The celebrated English Clown, whose feats on stilts have excited the wonder of thousands upon both sides of the Atlantic.

FREDERICK RENTZ!
The American Trick Clown, and
the Italian Trick Clown.

SIGNOR BLISS!
Walking the Ceiling.
Mons. Paul, the original Parisian Acrobate, will walk across the ceiling head down, feet upwards.

MRS. MELVILLE,
From the Melbourne Circus, and MADAME CAROLINE,
From Paris and St. Petersburg, in acts of dashing Equestrianism.

WILL DRIVE 40 RAMPANT STEEDS IN HAND
attached to the
GORGEOUS GOLDEN BAND CHARIOT, Built by Fielding Brothers of New York,
through the principal streets, guiding them unassisted
around corners, a feat never attempted by any other
"big team" driver either male or female.

A CONFIDENTIAL STATEMENT.
The proprietors of Nixon & Co's Mammoth Circus are aware that there are a number of companies that have been in the habit of travelling the country advertising performers as attached to their troupes, who had been dead and buried for years, or perhaps had never existed except in the imagination of some irresponsible lack puff. They are aware that such misrepresentations injure the business of really meritorious companies who will not descend to the use of deception to attract audience. It is, therefore, deemed proper to call attention to the following letters from the managers of the two most fashionable theatres in the country, Niles' in New York, and the Boston Theatre, as showing the reputation which the company maintains:

My dear Sir:
You are at liberty to use my name as a reference in regard to the extraordinary popularity which attended the representation of your circus, for forty consecutive nights, of the spectacle of the "Fate of the Ganges"
at this theatre, in which your Equestrian Troupe appeared with such distinguished success. With best wishes for your prosperity, and thanks for your valuable services, Believe me, my dear Sir, your truly yours, THOS. BARRY.

JAMES M. NIXON, Esq.
[From Wm. Niles, Esq., Proprietor of Niles' Garden,
New York, New York, April 11th, 1859.]

J. M. NIXON, Esq.:
My dear Sir—If it will be of any use to you in your coming travelling season, to speak your respects in this city, I can cheerfully bear testimony to the fact that your Troupe at my establishment met with unprecedented favor, both from the press and the public generally. With my very best wishes for your future prosperity, Believe me, Sir, to remain,
Very truly yours,
WM. NILES.

Winter Scene.

Sweet Susie Brown! my pretty one!
I'm sure you must remember—
If not for love, at least for fun—
The single ride in December;
When all the belles and all the beaux,
In spite of frosts would go forth,
And squeeze beneath the buffaloes,
Each other's hands, &c.

How brightly streamed the northern lights
Above the snowy ridges!
How pleasant were the winter nights,
Observed from country bridges!
Where "till" is sought with such address,
Mid laughter and flattery;
And lovers feel, and the press,
Each other's hearts, etc.

'Tis the singular and queer,
Of all the mad devices,
Love's flame should burn so bright and clear
On fuel formed of ice;
And yet we know its flame, indeed,
Most brilliant will grow forth,
When fanned behind a flying steed,
Hid under furs &c.

I'm sure you mind the village inn,
The supper and the revel;
How, in the general din and din,
Love shot his arrows level,
And don't forget how Harry Kidd Embarked you in the battery;
You kissed his lips—you know you did—
And he kissed yours, etc.

And when the forfeits all were paid,
How one old maid protested,
Until the younger ladies said
A prude they all detested;
Dearest! she cried—the ancient Ann—
Her modesty to show forth,
I'll never yield to any man
My virgin lips, &c.

The wintry winds, the homeward way,
Slew chilly in our faces;
But underneath the fur, we lay,
All snugly in our places;
One girl upon the forward seat—
The pretty Nelly Satterlee—
Declared Jack Frost had pinched her cheek,
And Billy Frost, etc.

Another, underneath her robe,
(The buff) "loves, not her dresses,"
Fair Patience, her attendant girl,
Detected in carresses,
Sprang up with angry blushing face,
Her innocence to show forth,
But showed her curls were out of place,
Her collar gone, &c.

And then the parting at the door!
Its tender, mutual blisses!
Sweet lips, from their abundant store,
Gave to the poor—in kisses!
The parting word—the long embrace—
Cupid's most dangerous witchery,
Brought fire to many a boyish face,
And raised sweet hopes, etc.

Dear Susie Brown, save you and I,
Of all the load of merriment,
No other part are left to try
Love's latest, best experiment;
And when the falling snows shall spread,
Our mutual hopes shall glow forth,
May Heaven bless our nuptial bed,
Increase our joys, &c.

Charity.

When you meet one suspected
Of some secret deed of shame,
And for this by all rejected,
As a thing of evil name,
Guard him every look and action;
Speak no word of his hidden blame,
For the slanderer's vile destruction
Yet may soil thy goodly name.

When you meet with one pursuing Ways the lost have entered in,
Working out his own undoing,
With his recklessness and sin;
Think if placed in his condition,
Would a kind word be vain?
Or a look of cold suspicion
Win thee back to truth again?

There are spots that bear no flowers,
Not because the soil is bad,
But the Summer's genial showers
Never make their blossoms glad;
Better have an act that's kindly Sometimes treated with disdain,
Than by judging others blindly,
Doom the innocent to pain.

Anecdotes.

Who is he? said a passer-by to a policeman who was endeavoring to raise an intoxicated individual who had fallen into the gutter.

Can't say, sir, replied the policeman, he can't give an account of himself.

Of course not, said the other; how can you expect an account from a man who has lost his balance.

Dr. Abernethy the celebrated English physician, never hesitated to speak the truth to his patients, rich or poor, noble or low-born.

A celebrated duchess, with a flushed face and carbuncled nose, consulting the doctor, exclaimed:

Where in the name of wonder, doctor, did I get such a nose as this?

Out of the deceiver, madam, out of the deceiver, replied the doctor.

A young woman of the tribe of Oldtown Indians, the other day in the cars, was asked by a rowdy if she would like to marry a white man.

No, said she, because good white men do not want to marry me, and scamps like you I won't have.

The rowdy left at the next station.

Is Mr. Jones in? asked an Irishman of the porter in a hotel.

No, was the reply, will you leave your name?

Oh, murdher, do you think I'd be after going home without a name.

Biddy, did you put an egg in the coffee to settle it? Yes, mum, I put in four; they were so bad I had to use the more of them.

YOU HAD BETTER TRY
My Mother's Salve.

THIS CELEBRATED PREPARATION has obtained an enviable and world-wide reputation for its great curative properties, and has been the agent for relieving so many sufferers, restoring them to health and usefulness, that the proprietors feel it a duty they owe to the public for their generous patronage bestowed upon this Salve, like diseases, will find in its use great relief, and in most cases a permanent cure.

"My Mother's Salve" is a PERFECT CHEMICAL COMPOUND, prepared from Roots, Herbs and Gums, gathered from the forest, and possesses HEALING, SOOTHING and PAIN-RELIEVING VIRTUES never before combined in a Salve or Ointment.

"My Mother's Salve" is SAFE and EFFECTUAL, and all those troubled with RHEUMATISM, SALT RHEUM, ERYSIPELAS, GOUT, PILES, and such pains, rub the parts smartly with the Salve, and in most cases a permanent cure.

"My Mother's Salve" In a BURN or SCALD, takes out the fire, soothes the irritating pain, and heals the wound more speedily and effectually than any other preparation.

"My Mother's Salve" Is worthy of confidence and thousands having used it and recommended it to their friends is a test of its worth. DIRECTIONS for USE are simple. Every mother and nurse know how to spread a plaster and dress a sore, and all who use the Salve will apply it in proportions, renewed at times, as good judgment may direct. For Rheumatism and other pains, rub the parts smartly with the Salve. In cases of Cough, Tightness of the Lungs, Sore Throat, and such like ailments, rub in cases of Rheumatism. In any case of pain a good result follows the use of this Salve. Prepared by M. E. BECK.

SCROFULAR REMEDY.

THIS Purely Vegetable Preparation is pleasant
and agreeable to the taste, and simple in its action, causing neither vomiting or purging. It
acts directly upon the primary cause of disease,
regulates the Bowels, removes all vitiated secre-
tions, giving healthy action to the Liver and correcting the Stomach. It overcomes that feeling of Languor which is often experienced in
the Spring and Summer, and renovates and restores the vitality and Physical Strength.

In thousands of cases of Scrofula and Scrofulous
Humors, such as Salt Rheum, Erysipelas,
Scald Head, Tumors, Ulcers, Bronchitis, Asthma,
Coughs, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Fever,
Sore, White Swelling, Dropsy, Boils, Badly
Itch, Piles, Old Sores, and all diseases which
manifest themselves by Eruptions or Eruptions on
the Skin, it has been used with the most gratifying
success, after every other known remedy has been
tried and failed to afford relief.

It is also an effectual cure for Liver Complaint,
Dyspepsia, Flatulency, Constiveness and Derange-
ment of the Urinary Organs.

It is an infallible remedy for irregularities and
other diseases peculiar to FEMALES, such as Weakness and Pain in the Back, Strangury, Affections of the Kidneys, Palpitation of the Heart,
Dizziness and Headache.

It can be given with perfect safety and most
desirable results in all cases, to any person from infancy to old age.

Miscellaneous.

For the Patriot.
"Think of Living."

Henry Ward Beecher, in a recent address to the young men of Brooklyn, said, health is a matter of religion; and few could utter this truth with better grace than he. When Fowler, the phrenologist, examined him, he walked round him as an amateur would round
a nobly developed horse, exclaiming, you are a splendid animal. Would that many more such men with "Sound minds in sound bodies," could be found in the ranks of the profession. The world needs them to teach this truth: that health is the reward of obedience to physical laws; while sickness is the reward of disobedience. Then will it be easily understood that health can only be maintained or restored by obedience to these same laws. These ideas are destined to work a revolution in the healing art; medicine will be taboos when it is seen that its use is a violation of natural laws and that it interferes with the efforts of Nature to rid the system of impurities; and in its stead, will be substituted those appliances or hygienic conditions which facilitate and regulate these efforts.

The Hygienic System of the ancient priests, was on this plan of aiding Nature by attending to the laws of health, in providing pure air, light, proper food and exercise,
with bathing, which was regarded as of great importance. It was a mournful event for the world when the study of medicine became a distinct profession; the priesthood deprived of the blessed privilege of ministering to the physical with the so intimately related spiritual wants of the sick, were left to the alternative of devoting their time and talents to the forming of creeds and dogmas, or the pursuit of fame or wealth; while those who took upon themselves the responsibility of curing disease by artificial remedies have brought upon the people many loathsome, if not incurable diseases, which they themselves acknowledge under the name of "drug diseases," and yet continue in their efforts to extricate themselves from the mazes of their
"most uncertain sciences," to make "confusion worse confounded."

But fortunately, of late, "experience proves that the result of medical controversies" has been, at least in part, to reduce by one half,
the amount of medicine taken; and though
the world has wandered far into the labyrinths
of error under the learned guidance of professional men, it is inclining gradually to listen to reason, and to throw off the restraints of time-honored dogmas and antiquated notions.

One of the most important results of this tendency of the times to embrace new heresies, is the establishment of the "Water Cure System," which is not merely the best method of curing disease, but it is the only true way to live to avoid sickness altogether.
Obedience to natural laws, is its fundamental principle, for perfect health cannot exist without this. But stern truths like these are not relished by the majority, who prefer to "enjoy life" in high living; not reflecting that a pure life is the happiest and longest; nor that all that is taken from the length of life
by fast living, does not come wholly from the end, but quite as much, if not more, from the middle of life.

Our Old Dressmaker.

This will never do, my dear, said my aunt,
reelily, as she pondered over a long account just come in, being the sum expended in the making of my first 'evening dress'.
Sixteen shillings, in addition to the materials! These London dressmakers are ruinous. We must find some one to work in the house, as did Lydia Jones.

And my poor aunt, newly imported from the country, sighed while she fastened my pretty dress, called track no more; for it marked my passing into the charming regions of young ladyhood. I liked it, the pretty pale silk of simple yet graceful fashion, which did duty as a "best dress" for more time than richer maidens would care to confess. The poor old thing! I found a fragment of it the other day, and sighed, remembering the scenes where it had been,
and the girlish bosom which, beneath its folds, had learned to throb with deeper pulses than those of pleasure at a new silk
dress.

My aunt's lamentation that night, brought forth their fruits. Letty, said she, on our next linen drapery investment, I have found a dress maker, to work as Lydia did, for eighteen pence a day. You can help her, my dear, as you used to help Lydia. Women can never learn too much regarding the use of their fingers.

Who is she, and when does she come,
aunt?

Her name is Hilton, and she comes tomorrow. Now my dear, go to your practi-

ing. It was, I remember, one of the wettest of all wet September days. Still, at half past eight, A. M., there faithfully appeared 'our dress maker'. Little cause had I to be alarmed at her; a poor, pale thing, who,
when she had taken off her damp shawl—
I recollect inwardly wondering at her folly in putting on such a thin one—sat down very still and demure, and eat her breakfast in silent respect.

I was a shy girl, a very shy girl; but I believe my good feelings so far conquered
my timidity as to make me enquire if Miss Hilton would not take off her wet shoes, and have a pair of slippers; and then noticing
my aunt's eye, I subsided in fearful blushes,
lest I had taken too much notice of 'the dressmaker'.

We got on very well together, Miss Hilton and I. She took the patterns skillfully, and yielded to all my little peculiarities about grace and beauty in costume. Moreover, she did not treat me as a child, but as a young lady; and when, with great dignity, I sat down to assist her in making the skirt of my aunt's new dress, Miss Hilton still kept a respectful silence, which soothed
my pride, and won my favor amazingly.

Now, I was a most romantic young dandy,
and knew nothing of the world except from books, of which I had read an infinity, good,
bad and indifferent. So, regarding my companion—with her small, neat figure, her face of that sort not properly termed good looking but yet decidedly looking good—I began to take a liking for her very soon, and ventured a few questions.

Had she come far, that wet morning?

Only about two miles.

She must have risen early, then?

Yes, about five; she had to finish a dress
before she came.

What a life! To rise at five, work till eight, walk two miles through those muddy lanes, (we lived a short distance out of London) and then begin and work again! I said nothing, but I thought much; and remembering the next time Miss Hilton stood cutting out, I had the sense to place a chair for her.
This she acknowledged with a faint blush,
which made me think of the sweet ideal of all young dressmakers—Miss Mitford's Olive Hathaway.

My dressmaker was no ideal; I do not mean to set her up as one. She was merely a gentle, modest, quiet young woman, who worked slowly, though carefully, and who,
for the first day, did not seem to have an idea beyond her needle and thread. The next, I found she had.

I, always an odd sort of girl, happened
just then to be wild about a new hobby—phrenology. Now Miss Hilton had a remarkably shaped forehead, and I never rested until I brought the plaster mapped out
head, and compared her bumps therewith;
upon which she smiled, and, becoming conversational, seemed to wish to learn something about the new science. So I, forgetting my shyness and pride of caste, began seriously to inform the mind of our new dressmaker.

I found she had a mind, and some graceful taste, which, whereupon I valorously undertook my mission! I indulged her with my juvenile notions on art and literature; and while she developed the skill of my fingers,
I tried to expand her dormant intellect. Poor, simple soul! I do believe she enjoyed it all,
sitting at my 'open window, with the vine
leaves peeping in, I dilating the while upon innumerable subjects, which doubtless had never before entered her mind. Among these were the country and its beauties. One day, some fortunate chance had brought me
nosegay of fax-glove, and showing them to her, I found to my intense pity that my little Londoner did not even know their name.

What! Had she never seen wild flowers?
Had she never been in the country?

Oh, yes; she had once lived for six months
in a guardship off Woolwich, where she had seen the country on the river banks, and her little sisters had sometimes brought home handfuls of daisies from the parks! But for herself, she had worked ever since she could remember; and, except the six months in the ship, had never lived any where but at Chelsea.

To me, how dreary seemed such an existence. To stitch—stitch one's days away;
never to read a book, or walk in a country
field, or even to know the name of a wild flower. Perhaps in my day-dream, I overlooked the fact that one rarely misses pleasure never known; yet still my feelings were strongly excited for poor Mary Hilton. I did not like her the less for learning that her Christian name was that sweet one—Mary.
And when all the work was done, and I began to wear the new dresses we had together
fabricated, I often thought of the pale, quiet little thing, and hoped that, wherever she was 'working out,' it was with no harder task mistress than my good aunt and I.

When we went for Miss Hilton again, it was a sudden call—to make morning. The lost relative was one too aged and too distant to cause me much grief; yet I remember the very fact of our sitting sewing black dresses caused our work to be rather grave; and then the dressmaker told me of a brother—
the only one she ever had—who died of a consumption; and how she used to sit by him at night, and go out working in the day;
towards the last, hurrying home so fast, lest anything might have happened, (that painful
gloss we shrinkingly cast over the cold world
death) while she was away; how, at the end,
it was as she feared. She was working with a lady, who kept her late to finish—
just to sew on a few trimmings and hooks and eyes—a mere half hour's work. But she was that one half hour too late, and never again saw her living brother.

It was a chance—a mere chance, she said,
the lady was not to blame. And sighing,
though without tears—she seemed too quiet
for that—the little dressmaker went on with her work again.

We could not finish the mourning in time;
it was my fault, I fear, inasmuch as I had invented a fantastic trimming which cost a world of trouble to make, to which poor Miss Hilton submitted with indignant patience. She only asked if she might bring her sister to help her; whereupon my aunt graciously assented. But I, always shy of strangers—found great discomfort in the plan. Moreover, the sister's name was Caroline, and I had a girlish prejudice—I have it still—against all Carolines. Miss Caroline Hilton was the exact image of my abhorrence;
pretty, vain, talkative—the very type of the very worst class of London dressmakers. My aristocratic pride rebelled against her forwardness; I ceased to work in the room;
in fact, from the moment she came, I—to travesty irreverently a line from the grandest modern poets—

"Strauk into myself, and was missing ever after."

Only I made my aunt promise that never again should Miss Caroline darken our doors
at random, that there are in it many lines and touches which belong not alone to the portrait of our dressmaker. Well, let it be so. When Mary Hilton came to us again it was in the winter time. She looked, as ever, pale, and was still prone to silence; but there was a greater air of content about her, which spoke of improved fortunes. And, in making our engagements with her, it came out accidentally that her hands were full of 'profitable occupations. Among her new 'ladies', I remember were the juvenile scions of a ducal household, wherein she used to be employed for weeks together. Now I was a simpleton in those days; I had a romantic reverence for rank—not vulgar curiosity, but an ideal homage—and greatly did I delight in hearing about the little noble women; and Mary Hilton seemed to like telling; not pompously, but simply, how Lady Alice was a beautiful child, and Lady Mary was rather cross, and Baby Lady Blanche was the sweetest little fairy in the world, and would come and talk with the 'dressmaker' as much as ever she was allowed. Many visions I mentally had of the lordly household,
where the chief filial duty was the privilege of entering carefully dressed with the desert, and where mamma was not mamma at all, 'but duchess.' How time passes! The other day I saw in the paper the marriage of the 'beautiful and accomplished Lady Blanche H—' I thought of 'Baby Lady Blanche,' then of poor Mary Hilton, and sighed.

Our dressmaker worked blithely through the short winter day, and even when night

closed, she seemed in no hurry to go home.
About nine o'clock there came up to our work room a message that some one had called to fetch Miss Hilton. 'A young man,' explained the domestic, hesitating, I suppose,
whether she should or should not say 'gentleman'.

I am really quite glad. I did not like your walking through those dark lanes, said I,
with infinite relief; and then added in extreme simplicity, I thought you had no brother-in-law now!

It is not—not my brother, murmured our dressmaker, blushing, but faintly, for even the quick blood of youth seemed to creep languidly beneath her constant pallor. I was a child—a very child then. I don't believe I had ever thought of love or lovers—that is,
in real life; but some instinct made me cease to question the young woman. Likewise, instead of descending with her, I staid up stairs, so that she met her friend alone. But I remember opening the blind a little way,
and watching two dark figures passing down
the snowy lane; watching them, and thinking strange thoughts. It seemed as if a new page were half opening in life's book.

It had opened; and with eyes light-blinded, I had begun to read—for myself, and not for another—before I again saw my little dressmaker.

My aunt and I had changed our abode to the very heart of London; and Mary Hilton had to come to us through four miles of weary streets. I think she would scarcely have done it for gain; it must have been
from positive regard for her old customers.
She looked much as usual—a little paler
perhaps; and she had a slight cough, which I was sorry to hear had lasted some time.
But she worked just as well, and just as patiently; and when at nine o'clock came the knock at the door, her smile, though half-concealed, was quite pleasant to see.

I am getting an old woman now, but to this day I incline to love two people who love one another. I do not mind what their rank in life may be; true love is the same in all ranks; and I honestly believe there was true love between my little dressmaker and her Daniel Ray. A respectable worthy young man was Daniel, as my good and prudent aunt took care to discover. I, in my simple way, discovered much more. Little did Mary Hilton talk about it; but from her disjointed words I learned that there was a long engagement; that Daniel was an assistant in a china shop; that they were waiting,
perhaps might have to wait for years, until he could afford to rent a little shop of his own,
when she would carry on the dressmaking
on the floor above; meanwhile she at least was quite content; for he came to tea to her father's every Sunday—and in the week
day, wherever she worked, he always fetched
her—saw her safe home to Chelsea, and waited back to the city again. Honest, unselfish, faithful lover! Poor Mary Hilton! She, in her humble way, had great happiness—the only happiness which fills a woman's heart.

But one night she had to go home without Daniel Ray. He was in the potteries, which was on business; and the poor little thing seemed grieved and trembling when she started to walk home and at night. She scarce minded the bright, cheerful streets;
she said; but she did not like to pass through the lonely squares. The next evening she asked permission to leave by daylight; and at last, with much hesitation, confessed that she had been spoken to by some rude man,
and had hurried on past her strength, until,
reaching home, she fainted. And then, in my inmost heart, I drew a parallel between myself—a young lady, tenderly guarded,
never suffered to cross the threshold alone—
and this poor person, exposed, without consideration, to any annoyance or danger. The lesson was not lost upon me. All my life, as far as my power went, I have taken care that, whatever her station, a woman should be treated as a woman.

For a week, Mary Hilton worked for us;
coming and returning each night; walking
the whole way I believe—though I never thought about it then, I have since; and the heedlessness of girlhood has risen up before me as the veriest hard heartedness. My aunt, too—but she had many things to occupy her mind, and to her, Mary Hilton was only 'the dressmaker.' Doubtless we did but as others did, and the young woman expected no more. For I remember, the last night
she looked so pale and wearied, that my aunt gave her at supper a glass of wine, and putting into her hand two shillings, instead of the usual eighteen pence, told her to have an omnibus ride home. And then Mary Hilton blushed and resisted, but finally took the sixpence with a look of such thankfulness!
Poor thing!

The next time we wrote for our dressmaker, there came no gentle little Mary Hilton, but the obnoxious Caroline. Her sister was in ill health, she said, and had been obliged to give up working out, but would make the dress at home if we liked. It was settled so, only we promised that Mary must come to us to try it on. She came one evening, accompanied by Daniel Ray. For this she faintly apologized, saying, he never would let her go out alone, now. Whereat my aunt looked pleased; and when she quitted the room, I heard her go into the hall and speak in her own kindly tones to honest Daniel.

Mary Hilton tried on my dress, but seemed scarcely able to stand the while. I remembered this afterwards, not then; for I was thinking of my pretty dress, and whether I would look well in it. At that time how I longed to make myself fair! Poor fool! But it was not for vanity, God knows. However,
it will not do to ponder on these things now.
I did not forget to put my usual question to Mary—how was she prospering in the world;
and whether there was any near chance of the 'little china shop, with Mrs. Ray, dressmaker on the first floor? She smiled hopefully, and said something about the spring
and in a very shy and timid way she hinted
that, if we wanted bonnets and millinery
there was a sister of Daniel's lately established in the next street—a sister always dependent on him till now. Faithfully I promised to give our small custom to Miss Ray; and so looking quite happy, our little dressmaker descended. I am glad I noticed the perfect content with which the delicate thing walked away slowly, leaning on her faithful Daniel.
Otherwise, in my after pity, I might have thought life's burden heavy, and its fate unequal. But it is not so.

Soon after my aunt wanted a winter bonnet, and I proposed to visit Miss Ray. Certainly, my dear Letty, was the contented acquaintance. So we went and found there a sharp featured, Frenchified young milliner, the very antipodes of Daniel. During the trying on I inquired after Miss Hilton.

Very ill Miss; confined to the house; consumption, I think. But wouldn't paler blue suit your complexion best?

I had down my ribbons, startled and distressed.

Poor Miss Hilton! said my compassionate
aunt. I thought she would die of consumption, so many dressmakers do. But how does your brother bear it?

As well as he can, ma'am. It was a foolish thing from the beginning, added the milliner sharply, her natural manner getting the better of her politeness. The Hiltons are all consumptive, and Daniel knew it. But I beg your pardon ma'am; perhaps you'll try it on this shape?

I turned away, feeling very sorrowful. My first intent was to ask my aunt to let me go and see poor Mary Hilton; but when one is young, one sometimes feels ashamed even of a good impulse which might be termed romantic; and I was so mocked at my romance already. I planned various

he lower-law appeals of the child. But a bright thought evidently flashed on her mind at the time referred to. She thought of the first lump of sugar, and reasoned thus: "If I had never given him a lump from the sugar-bowl, the sight of it on the table would not now arrest his attention. It was the beginning to give him the delicious sweet that did the mischief." This was good reasoning, and reached the true philosophy of the matter. If mothers would not have their children mortify them by outcries for this, that, and the other article upon the table, of which they are not allowed to partake freely, they must not begin to let them taste.

We say, then to parents, remember the first lump of sugar. Never begin to let your children touch, taste, or handle what you do not mean they may touch, taste, or handle, as long as they live. It is the first lump that introduces a child to the sugar-bowl.—Happy Home.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

Personal.

Some complaint has been made and much conversation has been created, because we admitted to our columns an article, signed "L," a few weeks since. In some measure, the proprietor of a newspaper is responsible for the communications which he suffers to be printed—but it has been our custom to allow all who have grievances to redress, sentiments to utter, reasons to urge, doctrines to expound, theories to maintain, and infidelity to shew, the advantage of our extensive circulation; and if in the opportunities thus offered, any individual thinks it proper to write himself a genius or a donkey, it is a matter in which we do not concern ourselves. In relation to the article above alluded to, we have very little to say. The person to whom reference is made—as we have since learned—we have always regarded in the light of a gentleman, and his acquaintance with us has been of the most pleasant and acceptable character. No motive could prompt us to impute such agreeable feelings.

In ideas of taste, individuals vary; there are many minds as to what constitute a gentleman: some are of opinion that a man has no right to select his companions, and that the attempt to do so, should be designated, exclusiveness—aristocracy—snobbery; and this depends upon the manner a person has been brought up—upon his early education. Some think that the true traits of a gentleman are evinced by a mild, unobtrusive bearing; by a deference to the opinions of our neighbors—by yielding to others as we would that they should do unto us; while many, on the other hand, believe that the way to exhibit to the world, the true gentleman, is by useful to swell up—assume importance—trample on the rights of all, and cut a big swath generally. Let each class enjoy its opinion as to the matter, and they will all, doubtless, be happy. As for ourselves, in the calm satisfaction of a clear conscience, and the pleasant knowledge that very many of our patrons are indebted to us in small items, and in the jubilant hope that we shall collect enough funds to day to purchase for our family a dinner to-morrow, we recommend to our exalted friends, frequent additions, in waters more potent than those which have the shores of Danube—aye—even those of the Jordan itself, it thereby their sins of omission and commission may be washed out and of their impurities they may be cleansed.

HOOK AND LADDER COMPANY. At the Annual Meeting of the Firemen's Aid, Hook and Ladder Company, No. 1, the following officers were chosen for the year ensuing: Foreman, Richard Newcomb. Assistant Foreman, Charles H. Edwards. Clerk and Treasurer, Joseph G. Brackett. Foreman of Hook, George Venzie, 2d. First Assistant, Perce Chubbuck. Second Assistant, Joshua Jones. Foreman of Hook, Lewis Wood. First Assistant, J. T. Venzie. Second Assistant, Abraham Apough. Firemen, J. G. Brackett, H. G. Pratt, Jr. Standing Committee, M. W. Sleeper, C. H. Edwards, Charles Arnold. Steward, Alden French.

The Company with its gallant Foreman, are in the best of spirits! ready to pull down and drag out when called upon, and with an overflowing Treasury, they will give a good account of themselves the coming Fourth of July.

Most people can stand almost anything better than a bad breath; and Dr. Stacking says, it is generally owing to decayed teeth that need filing, or to false teeth badly set; and we believe it is so, for the teeth that he sets, are never offensive. His office is at No. 19 Tremont Row, Boston.

CARPETS. The New England Carpet Company, of Boston, are supplying the people with carpets, at low prices. Read their announcement in the advertising columns of today's paper.

HOMOEOPATHIC FESTIVAL AT FANEUIL HALL. The Boston Academy of Homoeopathic Medicine, lately gave a public dinner to the members of the American Institute of Homoeopathy, which had just concluded its session in Boston.

The affair was conducted in a manner highly creditable to the Societies. The tables were crowded with an abundance of substantial and a profusion of the choicest luxuries.

The scene was one of general hospitality. Speeches were made by Dr. Wells, of Brooklyn, New York, Dr. Gregg, Judge Russell, Rev. T. Starr King, Mayor Lincoln, Professor Hempel, of the Philadelphia Homoeopathic College, Dr. Winslow Lewis, Professor Reed, and others.

In the evening, a levee was held in the main hall, as a compliment to the ladies who were interested in the late fair.

The hall was decorated with drapery, flags, and splendid mirrors; and on the platform, in front of the German Band, was a bust of Hahnemann. There were about two thousand ladies and gentlemen present, during the evening, in full dress, presenting an array of beauty and fashion, not often equalled in Boston, and including many of her most distinguished citizens.

The "Solids" went down in the Harbor, yesterday, and had a tip-top time.

CLERICAL. Rev. Mr. Ames of Somerville, has received a call from the First Congregational Society of this town, at a salary of one thousand dollars a year.

The vote was eight to eleven; of the eleven who voted for him, more than one half are not proprietors in the church. The above vote was an invitation to supply the pulpit for one year. The proposition brought before the meeting for a permanent settlement was defeated.

BOSTON THEATRE. Mr. Barry, the popular manager of the Boston Theatre, has concluded, in order to accommodate those living at a distance from the city, to repeat this afternoon, assisted by eminent artists, that favorite piece, "Gala Matinee," with other novelties. The performances commence at two o'clock, precisely; time for a pleasant ride, to enjoy an interesting amusement, and return to an early supper. See advertisement.

LADY'S FAIR. Don't forget the "Lady's Fair," to come off at the Town Hall, on Tuesday and Wednesday, of next week. We are assured that the entertainment will well repay a visit. A general invitation is extended, particularly to gentlemen bachelors. The ladies expect, on this occasion that every man will do his duty. Their card may be found in another column.

MORE AMUSEMENTS. Those of our citizens who take pleasure in the sports of the ring and equestrian performances, will be gratified to learn that north-provoking and original genius, Dan Rice, is soon to make his appearance amongst us. He has already thrown his bill to the breeze of public favor.

Most invalids suffering from a cough, think and act as though relief can only come from internally drugging the system with opium preparations. This is a great, and often proves a fatal mistake. Outward applications are most effectual. "MY MOTHER'S SALVE" has relieved and cured some cough cases of long standing coughs. See advertisement.

C. Gill & Co., inform the patrons in Quincy of Barrett's Dye House, that the Agency hereafter will be at Loud & Veazie's.

FAVOR. Our thanks are hereby tendered to C. Willard Perry for a liberal supply of most excellent milk; it was exceedingly rich and decidedly nutritious; a treat we greatly enjoyed.

ROBBERY. The shop of Mr. Josiah Hayden, in this town, was entered last Thursday night, and fourteen pair of boots stolen.

ICE CREAM. Loud & Veazie of this town, at their pleasant Saloon, offer to the lovers of this agreeable preparation, the very best article, equal to any obtained in the city.

QUERY.—What is the legal fee for cutting a toe nail?

CLAM CHOWDER. French, at his Saloon, corner of Coddington street and Washington square, will serve up this afternoon and evening one of his savory and delicious Chowders which has rendered his place so famous.

Deaths.

In this town on the 9th inst., Doreen Jonathan Bess, aged 95 years, 10 months and 7 days. The oldest person in Quincy.

Funeral this (Saturday) afternoon at 3 o'clock from the residence of his son, Lewis Bess, Esq., on Granite street.

On the 5th inst., Mrs. Doreen, wife of Capt. Robert Ellwell, aged 50 years and 6 months.

At Taunton, on the 6th inst., Mr. Joshua Torrey, of this town, aged 63 years.

Special Notices.

"TEA PARTY AND FAIR." The ladies connected with the First Congregational Society in Quincy, intend to hold a "Tea Party and Fair," on Tuesday, the 14th and Wednesday the 15th of June, at the Town Hall. The purpose is to obtain the means of renovating the furniture of the Church.

The Hall will be opened at 4 o'clock, P. M. of Tuesday, for the sale of useful and fancy articles. Tea and coffee, cake and ice cream, will be served continually from that time through the remainder of the evening on both days, and the ladies will be pleased to receive their friends and minister to their wants.

At eight o'clock on Tuesday evening, a "number of Characters" will be acted by a number of Amateurs, who will endeavor to make them interesting to the spectators.

Wednesday, the Hall will be open all day, for the sale of such things as are usually sought for on similar occasions. At 8 o'clock, P. M., visitors will be favored with a peep into the "Home Life" of a quiet New England family of the olden time; where they may obtain at once amusement and edification in observing the manners and the virtues of a past generation.

Every effort will be made to render the occasion attractive; and a cordial invitation is extended to all persons, whether friends of the Society or strangers, to join their festivity.

Admission for adults, through the day, 15 cents; after 4 P. M., on both evenings, 25 cents; for children, 10 cents, day and evening.

All members of the Society are earnestly requested to send their contributions to the Hall, on Tuesday, between the hours of 8 A. M., and 12, at noon.

SHOULDER ARMS. The Members of the Hancock Light Guards are hereby notified to meet at their Armory, this (SATURDAY) MAY 11th, at 4 o'clock, P. M., in Uniform and Equipped, for street Drill.

Per order of the Commander, E. W. SPAR, Clerk.

SPIRITUALISTS MEETING. Services, usual hours, forenoon and afternoon. In Johnson's (Mariposa) Hall, T. L. Wardsworth, of Maine, will speak to-morrow.

A BRILLIANT NOVEL.

JUST PUBLISHED,

SEACLIFF:

ON THE MYSTERY OF THE WESTERVELTS.

BY J. W. DEFOEST.

Author of "Oriental Acquaintance," "European Acquaintance," &c.

THIS is a story of American Life, embracing some features of society and traits of character, as new as they are striking and natural. The personages introduced are very few in number, and the interest centres in the family upon whom the hero makes a life in the first chapter. The plot is remarkable for its ingenuity and simplicity. The reader's curiosity is aroused at the outset by the appearance of a mystery, which is in the development of the story, and the plot is gradually unfolded, until the solution is not to be guessed, even by the most inveterate readers of fiction, until the catastrophe comes. The style of the narration is full of spirit, and the various dramatic personae are finely sketched and contrasted.

"Seacraft" will be, without question, the most fascinating novel of the season.

In one handsome volume, duodecimo, 466 pp., beautifully printed. Price $1.00.

To the Honorable County Commissioners for the County of Norfolk.

WE, the undersigned inhabitants of the Town of Colchester, respectfully pray, that a road may be laid out from the Highway line there, from Charles Littlefield to the Berchmond road, (formerly called the road from the western corner of Benjamin Pratt's orchard, through land of said Benjamin Pratt to near the corner of his road, and to widen the travel of the road four feet; and to widen the travel of the road near the shoemaker's shop of Charles Littlefield, and to straighten the road beginning at or near the northern corner of land of William Harris, easterly to near the dwelling house of J. & A. Pratt through land of J. & A. Pratt; and to straighten the road beginning at or near Governor's Hall, (so called,) through land of Charles Pratt of Lewis Bates and Henry Snow to near the dwelling house of William Taylor.

LOU & VEAZIE, and 23 others. Colchester, April 20th, 1859.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

NORFOLK, SS.

At a meeting of the County Commissioners, begun and held at Dedham, within and for said County of Norfolk, on the Twentieth day of May, A. D. 1859, by adjournment of the April meeting next preceding.

ON the Petition aforesaid, Ordered, that the County Commissioners will meet at the house of Howard Pratt in Colchester, in said County, on THURSDAY, the thirtieth day of June next, at eleven o'clock A. M., and there proceed to view the route described in said petition, and hear and act thereon.

And that an attested copy of said petition, with this order thereon, be served upon the Clerk of the Town of Colchester, thirty days at least before the time appointed for said view, and also that a like copy be published three weeks successively in the Quincy Patriot, a newspaper printed in Quincy, at least before said view, and that like copies be posted up in two or more public places in said Colchester, fourteen days at least before said view, that all persons and corporations interested for or against said petition may then and there appear and be heard if they see fit.

EZRA W. SAMPSON, Clerk.

How the Money Goes.

How goes the money? Well,
I'm sure it isn't hard to tell;
It goes for rent and water-rates,
For bread and butter, coal and grates,
Hats, caps and carpets, hoops and hose,
That's the way the money goes!

How goes the money? Nuy,
Don't everybody know the way?
It goes for bonnets, coats and capes,
Silks, satins, muslins, velvets, crapes,
Shawls, ribbons, furs and furbelows,
And that's the way the money goes!

How goes the money? Sure,
I wish the ways were something fewer;
It goes for wages, taxes, debts,
It goes for presents, goes for bets,
For points, points I catch and lose,
And that's the way the money goes!

How goes the money? Come,
I know it didn't go far;
It goes for schools and Sunday chimes,
For games for charity sometimes,
For missions and such things as those—
And that's the way the money goes!

How goes the money? There,
I'm out of patience, I declare;
It goes for plays and diamond pins,
For public aims and private sins,
For hollow shams and silly shows—
And that's the way the money goes!

Patience.

Ever the same calm lesson given—
You tell me I must patient be.
How long does patience last, and how
Can it be learned by me?
Dear mother, once I asked and hope
Through all the tedious days of spring,
To see my tiny birdies hatch'd,
And taught to chirp and sing?
While each green tree is full of life,
And fresh and lack the soft air fill
With music, or my silent nest,
Must I be patient still?

The seed I shed so long ago,
Still in the earth's green bosom rest,
While everywhere, o'er dale and hill,
Blooms gather on her breast,
The church-bell has its duties white,
The rose its cups of golden gold,
And laden bees fly late at eve
From blossoms manifold.
But in my garden's tiny space
No spring-like blossoms can I see;
Dear mother! 'tis a weary task,
Why must I patient be?

Ah, dearest child, a time it must come
To thee and all, or soon or late,
When all these childish griefs and joys,
Will seem of fustian's weight.
Yet childish griefs may pierce as deep,
Though momentarily, as manhood's woes;
Still are its tears dried as soon
As dew upon the rose.
Dear one, thy lingering seeds will grow,
Though leafless now, to bud and bloom,
If not to blush in Summer's wreath,
At least to crown her tomb.

Thy tiny, birds from brighter skies,
Their sweetest notes shall then have caught,
When all life's patient vigil long,
The truth to thee has taught.
Then shalt thou know the purpose high
For which thy tribulation came!
When patience, through experience, grows
To hope without a shame.
The heart that patiently abides
O'er flower and bird withholds so long,
Shall one day see its hope fulfill'd
In endless bloom and song.

To Daffodils.

Fair daffodils! we weep to see
You haste away so soon;
As yet the early rising sun
Has not attained his noon:
Stay, stay,
Until the hastening day
Has run.
But to the even-song
And, having prayed together, we Will go with you along.
We have short time to stay as you,
We have short time to stay as you,
As quick a growth to meet decay,
As you, or anything:
We die,
As your hours do; and dry
Away
Like to the Summer's rain,
Or as the pearls of morning dew,
Ne'er to be found again.

Anecdotes.

Dr. Whitehead was accused of rambling in his discourses, by one of his hearers, to which he replied, "if you will wander to the devil, I must ramble after you."

They don't make as good mirrors as they used to, remarked an old maid, as she observed a pair of sunken eyes, wrinkled face and livid complexion, in a glass that she usually looked into.

A bookkeeper was engaged, but could not get married at the specified time, owing to a want of funds. The time was fixed, said a friend. I know it, rejoined he. Then why were you not married? Well, said he, looking very serious, and approaching his ear confidentially, the fact is, I have got an extension.

A lady called on a witty friend who was not at home, and finding the piano dusty, wrote upon it, slattern. The next day they met, and the lady said: I called on you yesterday. Yes, was the reply. I saw your card on the piano.

A poor Irishman who was on his death-bed, and who was not quite reconciled to the long journey before him, was consoled by a friend that we must all die once. Why, honey, answered Paddy, that is the very thing that vexes me; if I could die half-a-dozen times, I should not mind it.

YOU HAD BETTER TRY My Mother's Salve.

THIS CELEBRATED PREPARATION has obtained an enviable and world-wide reputation for its great curative properties, and has been the agent for relieving so many sufferers, restoring them to health and usefulness, that the proprietors feel it a duty they owe to the public for their generous patronage bestowed upon this Salve, to make it accessible to rich and poor, that all afflicted may avail themselves of its healing qualities.

"My Mother's Salve" is a PERFECT CHEMICAL COMPOUND, prepared from ROOTS, HERBS and GUMS, gathered from the forest, and possesses HEALING, SOOTHING and PAIN-RELIEVING VIRTUES never before combined in a Salve or Ointment.

"My Mother's Salve" is SAFE and EFFECTUAL, and all those troubled with RHEUMATISM, SALT RHEUM, ERYSIPELAS, GOUT, PILES, and such like diseases, will find in its use great relief, and in most cases a permanent cure.

"My Mother's Salve" In a BURN or SCALD, takes out the fire, soothes the irritating pain, and heals the wound more speedily and effectually than any other preparation.

"My Mother's Salve" is worthy of confidence and thousands having used it and recommended it to their friends as a test of its worth. DIRECTIONS FOR USING

"My Mother's Salve" Are simple. Every mother and nurse know how to spread a plaster and dress a sore, and all who use the Salve will apply it in proper proportions, relieved at times, as good judgment may direct. For Rheumatism and other pains, rub the parts smartly with the Salve. In cases of Cough, Tightness of the Lungs, Sore Throat, and such like ailments, rub as in cases of Rheumatism. In any case of pain a good result follows the use of this Salve. Prepared by A. M. BECK. BURRELL & HUNTING, Sole Proprietors No. 6 Tremont Street, Boston. For Sale in Quincy by Mrs. E. HAYDEN Oct 30.

Election Day.—Governor Banks and the Militia—Grand Muster—Finance Matters—Great Export of Specie to Europe—Boston Banks in good Condition—Alas Bank—Post Office removal—Musings on the next Presidential Election—Judge Douglas—Governor Banks.

Monday last being Artillery Election, it was somewhat a gala day here. The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company celebrated their two-hundred-and-twenty-first Anniversary; the day was beautiful, and every thing passed off very pleasantly. Governor Banks was dressed in full uniform and made a fine appearance in the procession. In fact, he was the "observed of all observers," as the Company marched through the streets. The speech of the Governor made at the annual dinner of this Company in Faneuil Hall was very well received. He intimated that the entire body of the State Militia might be called out the present year, and encamp for a few days, on some immortal battle field. The idea of the Governor is original and I should think it would take with the public generally, and the citizen soldiers in particular. But where can all the volunteer companies of the State assemble? Certainly not at Bunker Hill, for that is nearly covered with houses. Concord or Lexington may be selected. We know of no other immortal battle fields in Massachusetts.

During the past fortnight, business has been steady, but as the merchants say, not driving. Mechanics find constant employment, at moderate wages, with good prospects ahead.

Money matters remain unchanged so far as regards the rates of discounts charged by the banks. Indications are clear, however, that financial matters in our great cities, will soon assume a somewhat different and more troubled aspect. Money is going out of our country by the steamers to Europe in large sums. Within three weeks past more than seven millions of dollars have been exported, and large amounts are soon to follow. The Boston Banks are watching this great stampede of specie to Europe and are curtailing their discounts. The specie in the city banks on Saturday last, was $6,741,700, being a loss of nearly three hundred thousand dollars the past week. The deposits seem unchanged, being as usual about 20,000,000. Bank shares old or new continue in good demand.

The Atlas Bank which was authorized lately to increase its capital from five hundred thousand to one million, called on the subscribers for the new stock, to "walk up to the captain's office" and pay in—which was promptly done to nearly the full amount. The stock is now selling at four per cent advance. This gives you some idea in what estimation bank shares are held by capitalists.

Another local item of the week, is the removal of the Post Office to its old quarters in State Street; much to the gratification of a vast majority of the citizens of Boston. Great improvements have been made in the exchange building. This terminates the vexed question about the Post Office, but cannot fail to operate unfavorably on real estate speculators in Summer street.

The political community of our country is very quiet. Speculations on the Presidential election are prevalent but hypothetical. It is said the Republican party will hold a National Convention at Wheeling, Ohio, in June, 1860, after the nomination is made for the Presidency by the Democrats. Heavy bets are offered on Mr. Douglas' chance even now; and if he gets the nomination by the Democracy he is sure to succeed Mr. Buchanan at the White House. Should Mr. Douglas fail to become the nominee, we may look to Massachusetts, with no small confidence, for a gentleman, about the size of our present Governor, to fill the Executive chair at Washington, on the fourth of March, 1861. But whoever receives the highest gift of the people in 1860, must be a Douglas man in political sentiment; no other person can be elected, than an advocate of popular sovereignty views in their widest capacity; as boldly advocated by Judge Douglas, the champion of Constitutional freedom and equality.

For the Patriot.

Dyspepsia.

BY W. M. EBBITT, M. D.

This very troublesome malady, regarded for some reason as one of the banes of good society, manifests itself under many different aspects, and is very irregular in its cause, modes of attack, progress, violence and duration.

The term "Dyspepsia" covers a multitude of disorders; it hides a multitude of professional sins; forms too often a most successful opportunity and means for medical pillaging; and when the sufferer is tired of physic, of being pillaged both as to purse and his remaining health, it affords an excuse to the disappointed patient for leaving the diseased state to progress, without disturbance on his part, till permanent organic mischief is produced; the excuse being based on the idea, deduced from the past want of success, that there is no cure.

At one time, he will attribute his sufferings to his head, and entertain the most alarming apprehensions of apoplexy; at another, to his respiratory organs, and imagine he has consumption; again, he describes the malady as in the liver or the stomach, or the spleen, and thus he continues on from month to month, or from year to year, a martyr to the most distressing chronic affection to which humanity is subject.

The nature and precise location of Dyspepsia have been, until recently, but imperfectly understood and known; and its victims have received but little sympathy or charity, either from medical men or non-professional observers.

Some of the principal causes of Dyspepsia, are protracted depression of spirits, deprivation of accustomed mental and physical exercise, pecuniary misfortune, loss of friends, disappointment, or mortification in a prominent cause.

Next in importance, may be named, the abuse of rich and highly seasoned food, stimulating drinks, coffee, tea, tobacco, and irregular eating hours; another common cause is the habitual use of physic.

The dyspeptic should ever cultivate an active, cheerful, healthy state of mind, and adhere to strict regularity in all the habits of life—as eating, sleeping, exercise, &c.

First, sufficient sleep should be allowed to enable the system to recover entirely from the fatigues of the preceding day.

Second, moderate and agreeable exercise according to his strength, should be taken, bearing in mind, that exercise, in order to be beneficial, must not be undertaken and performed as a task, but as a pleasant recreation.

Third, in partaking of food, he should never forget, while he is thus repairing the waste of the body, from the exercise of the functions, &c., that this also, was intended by our Creator to be a source of pleasure.

Let the rational person, therefore, and especially the dyspeptic, never eat with disorder, rapidly, but slowly, so that, masticated properly, his food may be taken into the stomach in a fit condition for the processes of digestion.

Proper Hygienic regulations will in some cases be sufficient to effect a cure, but there are many instances where the complaint will advance to disorganization, unless promptly met by appropriate remedies; and so far as I have observed, the remedies brought forward by Hahnemann and his disciples are most efficient.

The system of Homoeopathy is founded on rational and scientific principles; inasmuch as its remedies are exhibited with a definite object, and being specific in their effect, operate only upon those parts which are actually diseased, without inflaming healthy parts, debilitating the system or disturbing the function of any organ.

It is even now conceded by some of the most eminent Allopathic writers, that the Homoeopathic theory is correct; and of late, it is not so much our principle of cure, at the shafts of our opponents are directed, as to the doctrine of small doses.

It is not because the adherents of the old method cannot make themselves acquainted with the powers of attenuated drugs, but it is because their prejudices will not allow them to investigate the facts which are involved.

Some prefer to die of vomiting, purging, and sweating, as their predecessors have done for two thousand years, rather than be cured quietly under a new system.

These individuals are not satisfied unless they feel and see the poor body writhe and suffer for the sin of being sick. What care they for any interior or invisible action of a medicine, when they can be cut, racked and tortured, by the lancet, emetics, cathartics, blisters and moxas, and that too, secundum artem.

To be sure, they were not aware of any visible effects when the morbid agent operated upon their systems to produce the disease, but the curative part is in their own hands, and they are determined to exercise their privilege of a full appreciation of the whole modus operandi of the remedial process.—This part Nature has no power to cheat them of—but Hippocrates now reigns, and they are resolved to exercise their ancient reserved rights, and bleed, purge, sweat and blister, ad libitum.

For the Patriot.

A Few Words to "Pro Aris"

"Born of no master, — Of no house are we."

MR. EDITOR: The glowing style and off-hand manner in which "Pro Aris" rattles the bones of good old Hippocrates and the Arabian Galen, evinces, that he has a better acquaintance with Ethiopian Minstrelsy, as a champion bone-player, than with human physiology, pathology and rational therapeutics.

With this acknowledgment of his true merit, and true worth, as a gracie disputant, I would handle him kindly! and therefore, respectfully submit to his favorable notice and attentive consideration, the following lines of ancient psalmody:

"How happy is the man who hears Instructions warning voice."

The beautiful truth contained in the above couplet, the intelligent reader will perceive, does not advocate the use of equine drench, or any of those barbarous and cruel methods, with any kind of deludants — and water especially. And here I might close; but for the sake of melody, the reader may suppose, that "Pro Aris" is really a smart fellow! Does that disprove the truth of any reality? Does it even disprove the truth contained in the old maxim, that,—

"The curse of writing is an endless itch!"

Does it disprove the fact, that an endless itch is the primum movens cause why "Pro Aris" wants to "fight it out." Fight out what? And how? Fight out water! and with squirt-guns? Goodness gracious! Let us all go to prayer. No! rather would I take a comfortable dish of Sonchong tea with "Pro Aris" than knowingly, willfully, and with malice aforethought, abuse a medical and pharmaceutical agent of world-wide acknowledged importance,—an agent acknowledged of all men as Heaven's dew solidified in the form of aqua puna.

Bath, Maine, June 11, 1859.

Miscellaneous.

The Two Homes.

Two men on their way home, met at a street crossing, and then walked on together. They were neighbors and friends.

This has been a very hard day, said Mr. Freeman, in a gloomy voice. And as they walked homeward, they discouraged each other, and made darker the clouds that obscured their whole horizon.

Good evening, was at last said hurriedly; and the two men passed into their homes.

Mr. Walcott entered the room where his wife and children were gathered, and without speaking to any one, seated himself in a chair, and leaning his head back, closed his eyes. His countenance wore a sad, weary, exhausted look. He had been seated there for only a few minutes, when his wife said, in a fretful voice:

More trouble again?

What is the matter now? asked Mr. Walcott, almost starting.

John has been sent home from school.

What? Mr. Walcott partly rose from his chair.

He has been suspended for bad conduct.

Oh, dear! groaned Mr. Walcott; where is he?

Up in his room; I sent him there as soon as he came home. You'll have to do something with him. He'll be ruined if he goes on in this way. I'm out of all heart with him.

Mr. Walcott, excited as much by the manner in which his wife conveyed unpleasant information, as by the information itself, started up under the blind impulse of the moment, and going to the room where John had been sent on coming home from school, punished the boy severely, and thus without listening to the explanations which the poor child tried to make him hear.

Father, said the boy with forced calmness after the cruel stripes had ceased—I wasn't to blame, and if you will go with me to the teacher, I can prove myself innocent.

Mr. Walcott had never known his son to tell an untruth, and the words felt with a rebuke upon his heart.

Very well, we will see about that, he answered, with forced sternness; and leaving the room he went down stairs, feeling much more uncomfortable than when he went up. Again he seated himself in his large chair, and again leaned back his weary head, and closed his heavy eyelids. Sadder was his face than before. As he sat thus, his eldest daughter, in her sixteenth year, came and stood by him. She held a paper in her hand.

Father—he opened his eyes.

Here's my quarter's bill. Can't I have the money to take to school with me in the morning?

I am afraid not, answered Mr. Walcott, half in despair.

Nearly all the girls will bring in their money to-morrow; and it mortifies me to be behind the others. The daughter spoke fretfully; Mr. Walcott waved her aside with his hand, and she went off muttering and pouting.

It is mortifying, said Mrs. Walcott, a little sharply; and I don't wonder that Helen feels annoyed about it. The bill has to be paid, and I don't see why it may not be done as well first as last.

To this Mr. Walcott made no answer. The words but added another pressure to the heavy burden under which he was already staggering. After a silence of some moments, Mrs. Walcott said:

The coals are all gone.

Impossible! Mr. Walcott raised his head and looked incredulous. I laid in sixteen tons.

I can't help it if there were sixty tons instead of sixteen; they are all gone. The girls had had hard work to-day, to scrape up enough to keep the fire in.

There's been a shameful waste somewhere, said Mrs. Walcott, and she went on starting up and moving about the room with a very disturbed manner.

So you always say, when anything runs out, answered Mrs. Walcott, rather tartly.

The barrel of flour is gone also; but I suppose you have done your part with the rest, in using it up.

Mr. Walcott returned to his chair, and again seating himself, leaned back his head and closed his eyes as at first. How sad, and weary, and hopeless he felt. The burdens of the day had seemed almost too heavy for him; but he had borne up bravely. To gather strength for adverse circumstances, he had come home. Alas! that the process of exhaustion should still go on; that where only strength could be looked for on earth, no strength was given.

When the tea-bell rung, Mr. Walcott made no movement to obey the summons.

Come to supper, said his wife, coldly.

But he did not stir.

Are you not coming to supper? she called to him, as she was leaving the room.

I don't wish for anything this evening. My head aches very much, he answered.

In the dumps again! muttered Mrs. Walcott to herself. It's as much as one's life is worth to ask for money, or to say anything is wanted. And she kept on her way to the dining-room. When she returned, her husband was still sitting where she had left him.

Shall I bring you a cup of tea? she asked.

No; I don't wish for anything.

What's the matter, Mr. Walcott? What do you look so troubled about, as if you hadn't a friend in the world? What have I done to you?

There was no answer, for there was not a shade of real sympathy in the voice that made the queries—but rather of querulous dissatisfaction. A few moments Mrs. Walcott stood near her husband; but as he did not seem inclined to answer her questions, she turned away from him and resumed the employment which had been interrupted by the ringing of the tea-bell.

The whole evening passed without the occurrence of a single incident that gave a heartful pulsation to the sick heart of Mr. Walcott. No thoughtful kindness was manifested by any member of the family; but on the contrary, a narrow regard for self, and a looking to him only that he might supply the means of self-gratification.

No wonder for the pressure which was upon him, that Mr. Walcott felt utterly discouraged. He retired early, and sought to find that relief from mental disquietude in sleep, which he had vainly hoped for in the bosom of his family. But the whole night passed in broken slumber and disturbing dreams. From the cheerless morning meal at which he was reminded of the quarter's bill that must be paid, of the coals and flour that were out, and of the necessity of supplying Mrs.

Walcott's empty purse, he went forth to meet the difficulties of another day, faint at heart, and almost hopeless of success. A confident spirit, sustained by home affections, would have carried him through; but supported as he was, the burden was too heavy for him, and he sank under it. The day that opened so unpromisingly, closed upon him a ruined man.

Let us look in, for a few moments, upon Mr. Freeman, a friend and a neighbor of Mr. Walcott. He, also, had come home weary, dispirited and almost sick. The trials of the day had been unusually severe; and when he looked anxiously forward to scan the future, not even a gleam of light was seen along the black horizon.

As he stepped across the threshold of his dwelling, a pang shot through his heart; for the thought came: "How slight the present hold upon this life! Not for him, but for his wife and children was the pain."

Father's come! cried a glad little voice on the stairs, the moment his footfall sounded in the passage! then quick, pattering feet were heard—and then a tiny form was springing into his arms. Before reaching the sitting-room above, Alice, the eldest daughter, was by his side, her arm drawn fondly within his, and her loving eyes lifted to his face.

Are you not late, dear? It was the gentle voice of Mrs. Freeman.

Mr. Freeman could not trust himself to answer. He was too deeply troubled in spirit to assume at the moment a cheerful tone, and he had not wished to sadden the hearts that loved him, by letting the depression from which he was suffering, become too clearly apparent. But the eyes of Mrs. Freeman saw quickly below the surface.

Are you not well, Robert? she enquired tenderly, as she drew his arm-chair towards the centre of the room.

A little headache, he answered with a slight evasion.

Scarcely was Mr. Freeman seated, ere a pair of hands were busy with each foot, removing gaiter and shoe, and supplying their place with a pair of slippers. There was not one in the household, who did not feel happier for his return, nor one who did not seek to render him some kind office.

It was impossible under such a burst of heart-sunshine, for the spirit of Mr. Freeman long to remain shrouded. Almost imperceptibly to himself, gloomy thoughts gave place to more cheerful ones, and by the time tea was ready, he had half forgotten the fears which had so haunted him through the day.

But they could not be held back altogether, and their existence was marked, during the evening, by an unusual silence and abstraction of mind. This was observed by Mrs. Freeman, who more than half suspected the cause, kept back from her husband the knowledge of certain matters about which she had intended to speak to him; for she feared they would add to his mental disquietude.

During the evening, she gleaned from something he said, the real cause of his changed aspect. At once her thoughts commenced running in a new channel. By a few leading remarks she drew her husband into conversation on the subject of home expenses, and the propriety of restriction in various points. Many things were mutually pronounced superfluous, and easily to be dispensed with; and before sleep fell soothingly on the heavy eyelids of Mr. Freeman that night, an entire change in their style of living had been determined upon—a change that would reduce their expenses one half.

I see a light ahead, were the hopeful words of Mr. Freeman, as he resigned himself to slumber.

With renewed strength of mind and body, and a confident spirit, he went forth the next day; a day that he had looked forward to with fear and trembling. And it was only through this renewed hope and confident strength that he was able to overcome the difficulties, that loomed up, mountain high before him. Weak dependency would have ruined all. Home had proved his tower of strength—his walled city. Strengthened for the conflict, he had gone forth again into the world, and conquered in the struggle.

Torturing of the Widows.

In the interior of New California, which is east of Vancouver's Island and north of the river Columbia, among the tribe called "Taw-wa-tins," who are also Babines, and also among other tribes in their neighborhood the custom prevails of burning the bodies, with circumstances of peculiar barbarity, of the widows of the deceased. The dead body of the husband is laid naked upon a large heap of resinous wood, his wife is then placed upon the body and covered over with a skin; the pile is then lighted, and the poor woman is compelled to remain until she is nearly suffocated, when she is allowed to descend as best she can through the smoke and flames. No sooner, however, does she reach the ground, than she is expected to prevent the body from becoming distorted by the action of the fire on the muscles and sinews; and whenever such an event takes place, she must, with bare hands, restore the burning corpse to its proper position; her person being the whole time exposed to the scorching effects of the intense heat. Should she fail in the due performance of this indispensable rite, from weakness or the intensity of her pain, she is held up by some one until the body is consumed. A continual singing and beating of drums is kept up throughout the ceremony, which draws her cries. Afterwards she must collect the unconsumed pieces of bone and ashes, and put them in a bag made for the purpose, which she has to carry on her back for three years; remaining for the time a slave to her husband's relations, and being neither allowed to wash nor comb herself for the whole time, so that she soon becomes a most disgusting object. At the expiration of the three years, a feast is given by her tormentors, who invite all the friends and relations of her and themselves. At the commencement they deposit with great ceremony the remains of the burnt dead in a box, which she affix to the top of a high pole, and dance around it. The widow is then stripped naked, and smeared from head to foot with fish oil, over which one of the by-standers throw a quantity of swa's down covering her entire person. She is then obliged to dance with the others. After all this is over she is free to marry again, if she have the inclination, and courage enough to venture on a second risk of being roasted alive and the subsequent horrors.

A Miracle of Honesty.

At a party one evening several contested the honor of having done the most extraordinary thing, and a reverend gentleman was appointed sole judge of their respective pretensions.

One party produced his tanners' bill with a receipt attached to it. A buzz went through the room that this could not be outdone, when a second proved that he had just arrested his tailor for money he lent him.

The palm is his, was the general cry, when a third put in his claim.

Gentlemen, said he, I cannot boast of the feats of my predecessors, but have returned to the owners two umbrellas that they left at my house.

I'll hear no more, cried the astonished arbitrator, this is the very plus ultra of honesty, an unheard of deed; it is an act of virtue of which I never knew any one capable. The prize is—

Hold, cried out another, I've done still more than that.

Impossible! cried the whole company; let us hear.

I've been taking my town paper for twenty years, and paid for it every year in advance?

'Twas no use—he took the prize.

Making an Acknowledgment.

Not many years ago, a young man at a seminary in one of the New England States was found guilty of disobeying the rules of the school, as he had actually walked with a young lady, contrary to orders previously given, and perfectly well understood!

Mr. Edwards, as we will call him, was accordingly called upon to make acknowledgments before the school or be expelled. Whereupon, the said Mr. Edwards arose and said:

I prefer by all means to make an acknowledgment to being expelled from the school; and acknowledge that I walked with the lady mentioned, and with my umbrella, protected her from the storm! I also acknowledge that had I not done so, she might have taken cold and a serious illness or perhaps consumption might have been the result, in which case I should have blamed myself, and my teachers knowing the circumstances might also have blamed me.

The student resumed his seat with about as strong evidence of contrition in his countenance as was in his confession, and when the proper opportunity occurred, he inquired of the teachers how near a young lady and gentleman could walk and not break the rules of the school.

Well, said the teacher, walking a distance of six feet from a lady would not be considered an infringement of our regulations.

Soon after, Mr. Edwards was seen walking leisurely on the common with a lady, he having held of one end of a light pole, measuring six feet in length, while the lady held of the other end!

As they carried about the stick, which in fact was no impediment to their enjoyment, they chattered and walked and laughed, and

THE QUINCY PATRIOT.

"BORN TO NO MASTER, OF NO SECT ARE WE."

PISCATORY EXCURSION. We are gratified to learn that the "Solids" of this town, on their excursion last Friday week, in that superior Yacht, John Q. Adams, Commodore, E. B. South, with Assistant, ex Commodore, L. S. Bent, enjoyed the pleasure of sailing and fishing to the utmost extent. That veteran caterer, Louis A. French, who went as their chef for the "inner man," done his duty to the very "letter of the law." Washington M. French, who conveyed and returned the party, gave evidence that in whatever he undertakes, he can be trusted on land. Commodore South is highly praised for his nautical skill and the successful termination of the cruise, as well as the quiet sayings and attentive deportment of his "old tar" Assistant, ex Commodore, L. S. B. It affords us extreme gratification to notice this excursion of our young friends, and we hope that the return of this festival may be as pleasant as their anticipations picture to them will be the future ones.

THE "BINE AND SINEW AFOAT." The Democracy, under Captain Richard Newcomb, went a fishing on Saturday last, in the John Q. Adams. They had a fine time.

ARTISTICAL. Professor Chapman, M. A., of whom pleasant reminiscences of the past come crowding upon us—has taken up his residence, it will be perceived by his advertisement, once more amongst us. The very flattering manner, he says, with which he was received on a former visit, has prompted him to this. We are glad to hear it. For we think we never had an artist of the kind, who grew so fast in public favor, or gave such general satisfaction. His services were sought for, both far and near. The secret of this was, his charges were moderate, and his likenesses true to Nature—exact miniatures of the "human face Divine." Located on the Square, he is in the centre of attraction, where he would be happy to receive visitors and execute their orders.

GLOBE EXCHANGE, BOSTON. At this neat and convenient Saloon, corner of State street and Wilson's Lane, the merchant and business man will obtain facilities for the transaction of every thing relating to their interests; and its proprietor, W. S. Shattuck, with his most gentlemanly assistant, W. H. Wymon, will afford any information relative to city and other affairs, which may be desired. Our friends will find Mr. W. one of the most agreeable and affable gentlemen with whom they may form an acquaintance.

EQUESTRIAN. Dan Rice, the ne plus ultra of Clowns, will make his first bow to a Quincy audience, in a few days. If report speaks true, he is without a rival in his profession. As a manager, in the ring, or the comic characters which he personates, success has always rewarded his efforts. Some of the novelties which form a part of the exhibition, are presented in his advertisement, which may be found in another column.

THIRD PERSONS, who must take ether to have teeth extracted, had better go to a dentist who understands the nature of that agent—its effects on the human system, and how to control its action. Dr. Stocking, No. 19 Tremont Row, Boston, understands the whole subject.

CARPETS AT LOW PRICES. Those who are about redecorating or furnishing their dwellings with carpets should read the advertisement in our paper, of the New England Carpet Company of Boston.

Keep a supply of "MY MOTHER'S SALVE" by you, and do not be without it, as it is the best salve ever offered for sale. Burns, sores, scalds, boils, etc., readily heal when it is applied. See advertisement.

SERVICES IN THE UNITARIAN CHURCH.—The Rev. Joseph H. Thayer, formerly of the Calvinistic Society, will preach to-morrow in the First Congregational Church. This is as it should be, and promises the speedy coming of the time, when "the true worshipper shall worship the Father, not on this or that mount, but in spirit and in truth."

GRANULAR FUEL. An excellent article for kindling coal fires, and all purposes for which a quick hot fire is needed, which Mr. Sawd, the agent for this place is prepared to deliver for ten cents single bushel, or nine for twenty-five bushels, and upwards.

CLAN CHOWDER. Don't forget French, in the Square, corner of Coddington st. His Chowder will be ready to-day, as a dessert for dinner, a lunch for the afternoon, or a concluding repast for the evening.

Boston Correspondence.

Boston, June 16th, 1859.

European Matters mix'd up.—War.—New Alliance to the Rescue.—Mediation named.—American Commerce.—Want of Prosperity in Trade.—Fears of another Panic.—Money Matters in Boston.—Exciting news from Europe.—War in good earnest.—Austrians severely whipped.

Our European intelligence by the weekly Steamers, is so conflicting as to war-matters, that speculators in the commercial circles are as shy and timid as hares in their operations. At one time, we hear England is neutral and quiet; the next breeze of news that comes to us, is that she will soon, as a manifest destiny, be embroiled in war. Now the position of Great Britain in this war is the great lever of business operations in the United States. Once involve England in war, and our commerce would expand to a greater extent than at any former period. At present, the conflict is with Austria on the one side, and France, with Italy, her ally, on the other side. The seat of war is confined to northern Italy. No decisive battles have yet been fought, though the belligerent armies are near each other. The first battle was conceded to be in favor of the Allies, and the star of Louis Napoleon in the ascendant. Since then, the Austrians claim success in subsequent skirmishes; evidently acting on the defensive. Which way England will go is uncertain; her sympathies are evidently with Austria, and should she take sides with Austria, France and England would be at war. The latest outré is, that the German States with Prussia at their head, will soon come to the rescue of Austria, who you know is a mighty country, with a population of 13,000,000. Should Germany unite with Austria, Russia will become an ally to France and the war in Europe become universal. Meanwhile, the friends of peace in Europe are not without hopes that some mediation may be offered to the belligerent nations, by England or some other neutral power, by which hostilities may cease, and the olive branch of peace once more wave over the European Continent.

The warlike condition of our trans-Atlantic brethren, is the theme of all circles here, more especially with business men. Prices are in some measure graduated by the news from the "Old Country" as they spread over the telegraph wires to us. One day, breadstuffs and provisions are falling; the next day, prices advance, and again comes a "de-speculation, and will justly end to the discomfiture and ruin of not a few comarants, who try to make sudden fortunes by telegraphic dispatches.

Unless there is universal war in Europe we shall probably have the stillest summer here for business for many years. An excellent article on Commercial matters, appeared in the Traveller of Tuesday, in which the writer, speaking of the still and quiet appearance of our wharves, says, "there is but little life or energy in the business community and all cautious merchants are keeping or preparing to keep under snug sail for the next six months at least. Nothing but the most careful and sagacious of our great system of credit and banking will hinder us from another panic—even so close upon the heels of the last." He contends as a general thing, that trade with our merchants for three years past has been without profits. Imports have been too heavy the present year; New York alone, importing in the month of May, twenty-three million dollars; principally silks and dry goods. "Could we wonder much" (says the writer) "if another panic should overtake us before we have cleared the wreck of 1857. Perhaps it would serve us right to have another. It seems to be settled that we are never to learn wisdom by our sad experience of 1837 and 1857; but we go on in the same course of reckless business operations, expenditures and personal extravagance." In the Boston market this week, money is not quite so easy by reason of considerable shipments of specie to New York. Stocks are dull and heavy and will continue so, through the summer. A good demand is made upon our banks, but so far they are able to supply their customers.

Thursday no on. Since writing the above, we have three days later news from Europe. The Allies are gaining fresh victories. The Austrians have been repulsed with great loss in attempting to retake Palestro. There have been several skirmishes or battles in quick succession. The king of Sardinia led in person where the fight was most furious. Four hundred Austrians were drowned in a canal during the combat at Palestro. On all sides the Allies were triumphant. The Austrians in full retreat were re-crossing the Ticino. Garibaldi, the Italian patriot, had gained a new victory. So far he has had all kinds of luck.

Yesterday was celebrated by the Hancock Light Guards; being the fourth anniversary of the Company. Particulars in our next.

Deaths.

In Randolph, on the 12th inst., Mrs. Sophia, wife of Mr. David Thayer, formerly of this town.

THE FAIR OF THE FIRST CONGREGATIONALIST SOCIETY AT TOWN HALL.

Mid the many temptations and allurements which are in constant attendance upon the unfortunate possessor of a few paltry dimes, continually reminding him of his opportunities for "doing good" as a circulating library, there is no inducement so tempting, or advocate so powerful and unresisting, as when a "General Variety Store" is opened for the million, for a few days only and the attendants are selected from the fairest creation of God's handiwork. No cheapening of goods then by professional shoppers, and the words "charge it," we never hear in such stores. He who can withstand such an appeal, seldom if ever remembers the "golden rule," or deserves to be blessed by the smiles of any of Eve's daughters. Such cannot but be successful; and it is, therefore, not a matter of surprise, that the Fair held at the Town Hall, during Tuesday and Wednesday, was eminently successful, as far as we could judge from the general satisfaction and pleasure evinced by the numbers who attended. The tasteful decorations of the Hall, was a subject of comment, and reflected much credit upon its projectors. The dramatic entertainment on Tuesday evening, by amateurs, was amusing, and well received, exceeding the expectations of many. And the older portion of the audience were reminded of many scenes in their early childhood on Wednesday evening, as the curtain rose and displayed the "antiquarian assembly or life-like scenes of by-gone days." The Fair was successful throughout, and the receipts full as ample as was expected.

A BRILLIANT NOVEL.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SEACLIFF:

ON THE MYSTERY OF THE WESTERVELTS.

BY J. W. SEACLIFF.

Author of "Ordeal Acquiescence," "European Acquiescence," &c.

THIS is a story of American Life, embracing some of the society and traits of character that are as new as they are striking and natural. The personages introduced are very alive in number, and the interest centers in the path upon whom the how makes a thrill in the chapters. The plot is remarkable for its simplicity. The reader's curiosity is excited at the outset by the appearance of a mysterious man, and the development of the story leads to the disclosure of the secret, but the solution will not be guessed, even by the most voracious readers of fiction, until the catastrophe. The style of the narration is full of wit, and the various dramatic personae are sketched and contrasted.

"Seaclyff" will be, without question, the most exciting novel of the season.

In one handsome volume, abridged, 466 pp., uniformly printed. Price $1.00.

The Trade supplied on the usual terms.

Copies sent, post-paid, upon receipt of price.

Poetry.

The Sweetest Dream.

How my loving heart has wandered,
Up and down the vale of dreams;
Filling up the weird recesses
With a thousand glory-beams—
Making all the day so happy
With some beauty haunted thought,
That, from out the haunted visions,
I had by some magic caught.

Oh, I've had sweet dreams of childhood—
Dreamed my heart was light and free,
And I danced adown the meadow,
With a shout of childish glee,
Gathering the stately blossoms—
Chasing butterfly and bird—
Listening to their mystic language,
Which my spirit only heard.

And I've dreamed of halls of grandeur,
Where in haughty pride I dwelt,
While a crowd of gold-god servers
Ever at my footstool knelt,
Peers and gentry were on my bosom,
On my brow a crown of gold—
On my lips a song of gladness,
But within, a heart so cold!

Then I've dreamed of gorgeous temples,
Where was shined the Goddess Fame,
And she gave me wreaths of laurel—
Told me that my simple name
Echoed wide o'er land and ocean—
That each thought and slightest word
Had, within some human bosom,
Deep the font of feeling stirred.

But I've had another vision,
That has made my warm heart leap;
Through 'twas but a wild illusion,
I would yet the memory keep;
For the world had failed to charm me
With its hollow uttered phrase,
And my spirit, sad and lonely,
Fought for older, brighter days.

Then a noble form stood near me,
And an earnest voice, but low,
As if simply whispered, "Darling,"
Through my being sent a glow;
For I knew my heart, so weary,
Now had found a place of rest—
Like a bird that long has wandered—
Recalled at last the dear home-nest.

Gazing now adown the vista
Of the sunny realm of dreams,
Here and there, through the cloud rifts,
Bright some ray of beauty streams;
And as all these haunting visions,
Come at memory's gentle call,
Still this last one is the brightest
And the sweetest of them all.

Little Rose.

She comes with fairy footsteps;
And her shadow plays like a summer shade
Across the garden wall.
The golden light is dancing bright,
And the fair young locks are waving free
To the young of the air.

Like a sportive fawn she boundeth
So gaily along,
As a wild young bird she caroleth
The burden of a song.
The summer flowers are clustering thick
Around her dancing feet,
And on her cheek the summer breeze
Is breathing soft and sweet.

The very sunbeams seem to linger
Above that holy head,
And the wild flowers at her coming
Their richest fragrance shed.
And oh! how lovely, light and fragrance
Mingle in the life within!
Oh! how fondly do they nestle
Round the soul that knows no sin.

She comes the spirit of our childhood—
A thing of mortal birth,
Yet bearing still the breath of heaven,
To redeem her from the earth.
She comes in bright-robed innocence,
Unsoiled by blot or blemish,
And poeeth by our wayward path,
A gleam of angel light.

Oh! blessed things are children!
Thy gifts of heavenly love;
They stand betwixt our worldly hearts
And better things above.
They link us with the spirit-world
By purity and truth,
And keep our hearts still fresh and young,
With the presence of their youth.

Anecdotes.

A French magistrate, noted for his love of the pleasures of the table, speaking one day to a friend, said:

We have just been eating a superb turkey; it was excellent, stuffed with brains to the neck, tender, delicate, and of a high flavor. We left only the bones.

How many of you were there? said his friend.

Two, replied the magistrate, the turkey and myself.

I tell you Susan, that I will commit suicide if you won't have me.

Well, Thomas as soon as you have given me that proof of your affection, I will believe that you love me.

Well, I declare, said Mrs. Sims, throwing down a newspaper, there is really nothing in this paper at all.

I should think not, observed her daughter, for it is just two hours since you commenced reading it.

I'm afraid! I'm afraid! screamed a young lady of powerful lungs and fingers to match, as she exercised both at the piano.

I should think you were, growled an old bachelor, judging from the squall you raise.

You are writing my bill on very rough paper, said a client to his attorney.

Never mind, said the lawyer, it has to be filed before it comes into court.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Many of our readers will doubtless remember the mysterious murder committed in Grand street, Williamsburg, (N. Y.) in the year 1836. The facts are simply thus:

Mrs. Weldon, an old inhabitant of Williamsburg, lived in a small frame house at the further end of Grand street at that time sparsely built up. A niece and servant girl, were the only persons residing with her. The former appeared to be very much attached to her aunt, and attended to her wants with filial assiduity. The domestic had lived with Mrs. Weldon for five years, and was considered a good servant.

Mrs. Weldon was a widow lady of ample means in the shape of annuity, which was to cease with her death. She was rather miserly in her disposition, and accustomed to keep up a small income at some time lost a considerable amount by the breaking of a bank, and since then no one could persuade her to have anything to do with a bank. It was supposed this hoarding propensity was known only to the niece, Miss Milwood, and the servant girl Hannah.

One morning in September, 1836, the inhabitants of Grand street were electrified by the report that Mrs. Weldon had been found dead in her bed; and that strong proof of guilt existed against her niece, Miss Milwood.

I read the account in the newspapers, and supposed it was one of those plain cases which admit of no doubt. The matter having occurred in Williamsburg, it was out of my head, and I thought no more about it.

The following morning, while at breakfast, my servant girl informed me that a gentleman wanted to see me. I told the girl to show him up, as my time was precious, and I could advise with him while at breakfast.

Almost immediately afterwards a young man of very respectable appearance entered the room. I motioned him to a seat.

Mr. Johnson, he said, I have come on a very painful business. I want your assistance. He hesitated to proceed.

What can I do for you, my dear sir? I replied. You may command me.

You have doubtless read about the murder in Williamsburg, the day before yesterday. A young lady, Miss Emily Milwood, has been arrested on suspicion. Now I know she is innocent, and I want your assistance to prove it.

I have read the particulars in the newspapers, and I must confess the evidence appeared to me to be overwhelming. I know the evidence is strong against her, he replied, but if you knew Emily as well as I do, sir, you would be morally certain that she is incapable of the deed.

The young man spoke with such warmth that I looked at him somewhat curiously. Are you related to Miss Milwood? I asked.

Mr. Johnson, I will tell you all; the truth is, we are engaged to be married. I have known her from a child. Her heart is pure and noble; she would not injure a worm, much less murder her aunt and benefactor.

I began to feel interested in the case; and told him that I would proceed at once to Williamsburg and investigate the matter. He thanked me and bade me good morning, and promised to call the following day to learn the result of my enquiries.

I hurried through my breakfast, and proceeded at once to the scene of the tragedy. I found the room exactly in the same condition as it was when the murder was first discovered.

It was in the front room of the second story. Mrs. Weldon must have been asleep when the deed was done. She was discovered hanging half out of bed, with her throat cut in a frightful manner. The bed and carpet were stained with blood. And strange to say, the blood could be traced to the door where Miss Milwood slept, but no farther.

It appeared that some persons in the street were alarmed in the morning by the servant girl looking out of her mistress' chamber window and calling 'murder!' They immediately went to the front door, and found it fastened securely. The back doors and windows were also fastened. Some watchmen were procured and an examination was made of the premises. The strongest proofs were discovered that Miss Milwood was the perpetrator of the deed. The blood, as I have before said, was traced to her chamber. A considerable sum of money was found in her trunks, together with some old fashioned jewelry, which was known to have belonged to the deceased. But if that was not enough to convict her, here was still more damning proof. Her bedroom window was found open, some drops of blood were on the window-sill, and underneath her window, in the green grass, were found the knife with which the deed had been committed. It was surmised that she had committed the deed, and after taking possession of the hoarded money and jewels, had gone to her own room, and thrown the knife out of the window. She had then retired to bed, where she was discovered in the morning fast asleep.

When I heard all this, I was far from being satisfied. It seemed to me if she had any intelligence at all, she would have taken more pains to conceal her guilt, and I made up my mind that if she were guilty, she must be one of the stupid, clumsy people we sometimes meet in the world.

I next proceeded to examine the chamber where the deed had been committed, very minutely. I had not been five minutes in the apartment before I was satisfied that Miss Milwood was innocent.

My reasons were these: The wound inflicted on the deceased was too deep and extensive to have been made by a woman's hand. The murderer, whoever he was, was left-handed. While searching in the room a button on the floor a vest button; it was rather peculiar, being made of blue porcelain. I put it in my pocket.

My next proceeding was to visit the young lady in custody. My profession procured me an order instantly, and I was shown into her presence.

I explained my business to her, and stated who engaged me. When I mentioned her lover's name, tears filled her eyes. She was a very pretty girl; the epitome of female modesty and delicacy.

Dear Henry! she exclaimed, how noble he is! Thank God, he at least does not think me guilty!

She could restrain herself no longer, but wept bitterly.

I have been in prison for two days, she continued after a pause, and yet I cannot realize the fact. It appears like a hideous dream to me. I repeat to myself the question: can it be possible I am arrested for the murder of my aunt—my benefactress? No, no, it cannot be.

Miss Milwood, I returned, unless we can set aside the evidence, I know not what we must do; it is fearfully strong against you. You surely do not believe me guilty of this fearful crime? she replied, her face flushing with indignation.

I do not, but it may be different with a jury. Let me hear your statement.

I have no statement to make. My aunt retired early to rest that night. I had a headache, and about ten o'clock took a cup of tea. I then grew very sleepy and went to bed. I slept all night through without waking. In fact I was asleep when the officers of justice entered my room.

Did you sleep more soundly than usual? Now that you remind me of it, I did, indeed. I scarcely ever remember to have slept so soundly before, and when awakened, I was unaccountably drowsy.

Who gave you the tea you took the night before? The servant, Hannah.

Do you suspect she could have committed the deed? Impossible! a better servant, or one more kind to my aunt, could not be found than she is.

After a little conversation, I took my leave. When I was outside the prison wall I must confess I was at a loss. My opinion as to Miss Milwood's innocence was confirmed, it is true, but I was no nearer discovering the real murderer. I next determined I would visit the servant Hannah. She was confined as a witness.

I found a good looking girl of about twenty-two years of age. The countenance was an open one, but there was an expression of deceit about the lips which I did not like. I hadn't much faith in physiognomy, so I put it down for as much as it was worth. Hannah's story was satisfactory enough. She stated that on the night of the murder she had retired to bed about eleven o'clock, and heard no noise in the night. She got up early in the morning, as was customary with her, and on entering her mistress' bedroom had discovered the fearful tragedy.

She at once opened the window and screamed out murder! She testified to the affection Miss Milwood entertained for her aunt, and it was her opinion that she was entirely guiltless of the crime imputed to her.

I soon found that this Hannah was what was called a smart girl. She gave her answers readily and without hesitation—almost too much so to please my fastidious taste. I have already said that it was no woman who had committed the deed; this of course precluded the idea of Hannah being the guilty party. The question then arose, if neither of the women committed the deed, who was the murderer? Here I must acknowledge that I was completely at fault. All the doors and windows being fastened on the inside, precluded the idea of the house having been entered from without.

I felt annoyed at being baffled, and started to walk to the ferry as night was fast approaching. I had not proceeded many steps down Grand street, when my eyes were attracted by the glaring show bottles of a drug store. A sudden thought came into my head, and I entered the shop.

Two or three people were inside imbibing soda water. I was very thirsty and waited my turn. The owner of the shop and a customer were conversing about the murder.

There can be no doubt of Miss Milwood's guilt, said the druggist; and Lord! I should have thought she would have been the last person in the world to have done such a deed; she is such a nice spoken young lady. You know her then? asked the customer. Certainly! I knew them all. Why, only the very evening of the murder, the servant girl, Hannah, was in my store.

I picked up my ears, but no further conversation passed between them. The customers were all served, and I was the only one left.

You stated just now that Mrs. Weldon's servant girl, Hannah, was in your store on the night of the murder. May I ask what she bought. Let me see said the druggist; it was morphine; she stated she had a toothache.

I said no more, but left the store. I had now the first clue; it was a faint one, to be sure, but I felt certain that Hannah knew more about the murder than anybody else. I remembered Miss Milwood's extraordinary closeness on the night in question, and to this I added the fact that she had partaken of a cup of tea prepared by Hannah, and that the latter had purchased morphine the same evening at the drug store. But then, my first conviction pushed itself into my mind—no woman had committed the murder. The first link of the chain was found, however, and I was now hopeful. I resumed my walk toward the ferry determined to sleep on it.

During that memorable walk down Grand street, something also immediately attracted my attention. It was a tailor's shop, outside of which various garments were exposed for sale. Among them were some vests, the buttons of which immediately struck me; they were made of blue porcelain.

I began to examine these things as if I wanted to purchase. An obliging shopman came outside to try to sell.

What do you ask for one of these vests? I demanded.

Two dollars, was the reply.

They are something new, are they not? I enquired.

Quite new; we have not sold more than two or three of them. We have not had them in the shop more than three or four days.

I saw a man with one on yesterday, I said. You mean Bill Hostley, ostler at the George Inn.

Yes, that was the man, I returned. Good evening. I don't think I will buy one tonight.

To make my way to George Inn was the work of a very minute. I asked to see the ostler, and was directed to the stable.

I approached it with a cautious step, and peeped in at the door. The ostler was cleaning down a horse with his left hand! Soon he turned, and he wore the famous vest with the middle blue porcelain button wanting! I knew I stood in the presence of the murderer.

I determined on practising a ruse. I suddenly advanced, and seizing him by the arm, exclaimed: William Hostley, I arrest you for the murder of Mrs. Weldon! Your confederate, Hannah, has made a full confession!

The murderer turned deadly pale; his limbs shook, and he betrayed the most abject fear.

I will confess all! he exclaimed.

He was immediately removed to jail, and that night made a full confession, which amounted to this:

He had been engaged to be married to Hannah, who, it seems was a thoroughly bad woman, and was tired of the delay, and proposed to him that they should rob her mistress. It was finally agreed that Hannah should drug Miss Milwood's tea with a powerful opiate, and after she was asleep she let in Hostley. They then decided it would be better to put the old woman out of the way, and throw the guilt on the niece.

Hostley committed the deed, and after having robbed their victim, they proceeded to Miss Milwood's chamber, and placed a portion of the money in her trunk. The knife was then thrown out of the window. Hostley left the house, and Hannah fastened the door after him. The deed was skillfully planned, and had Hannah been only concerned, a guiltless party might have suffered. But Hostley was by no means a courageous man, and wanted presence of mind.

They were both tried, found guilty, and in two months from the commission of the deed, they were hanged.

Six months after this occurrence, I one day received an invitation to a wedding. It was that of Emily Milwood and her faithful lover. I have seen them quite lately; they are as happy as it is possible to be, and have two fine children to add to their felicity.

Inalienable Rights of Americans.

A wag has made up the following summary of what he considers the "Inalienable Rights of Americans," and which are not enumerated in the "Declaration of Independence."

To know any trade or business without apprenticeship or experience.

To marry without regard to fortune, state of health, position, or opinion of parents or friends.

To have wife and children dependent on contingencies of business, and, in case of sudden death leave them wholly unprovided for.

To put off upon hiring strangers the literary, moral, and religious education of children.

To teach children no good trade, hoping they will have, when grown up, wit enough to live on the industry of other people.

To enjoy the general sympathy, when made bankrupt, by reckless speculators.

To cheat the government, if possible.

To hold office without being competent to discharge its duties.

To build houses with nine and six inch wall, and go to the funeral of tenants, firemen and others, killed by their fall, weeping over the mysterious dispensation of Providence.

To build up cities and towns without parks, public squares, broad streets, or ventilated blocks, and call pestilence a visitation of God.

Hints to Travellers.

Take one-fourth more money than your actual estimated expenses.

Acquaint yourself with the geography of the route and region of travel.

Have a good supply of change, and have no bill or piece higher than ten dollars, that you may not take counterfeit change.

So arrange it as not to have but a single article of luggage to look after.

Dress substantially; better be too hot for two or three hours at noon, than to be too cool for the remainder of the twenty-four.

Arrange, under all circumstances, to be at the place of starting fifteen or twenty minutes before the time, thus allowing for unavoidable or unanticipated detention on the way.

Do not commence a day's travel before breakfast, even if it has to be eaten at daylight. Dinner or supper, or both, can be more healthfully dispensed with than a good, warm breakfast.

Put your purse and watch in your vest pocket, and put all under your pillow, and you will not be likely to leave either.

The most secure fastening of your chamber door, is a common bolt on the inside; if there is none, lock the door, turn the key so that it can be drawn partly out, and put the wash-basin under it; thus, any attempt to use a jimmy or put in another key, will push it out, and cause a racket among the crockery, which will be pretty certain to rouse the sleeper and rout the robber.

A sixpenny sandwich eaten leisurely in the cars is better than a dollar dinner bolted at a station.

Take with you a month's supply of patience, and always think thirteen times before you reply once to any supposed rudeness or insult, or intonation.

Do not suppose yourself specially and designedly neglected, if waiters at hotels do not bring what you call for in double quick time; nothing so distinctly marks the well bred man as a quiet waiting on such occasions; passion proves the puppy.

Do not allow yourself to converse in a tone loud enough to be heard by a person two or three seats from you; it is the mark of a boor if in a man, and a want of refinement and lady-like delicacy, if in a woman. A gentleman is not noisy; ladies are serene.

Comply cheerfully and gracefully with the customs of the conveyance in which you travel, and of the place where you stop.

Respect yourself by exhibiting the manners of a gentleman and a lady, if you wish to be treated as such, and then you will receive the respect of others.

Travel is a great leveller; take the position which others assign you from your conduct rather than from your pretensions.—Hall's Journal of Health.

A Thought on Self Reliance.

The oak that stands alone to contend with the tempest's blasts, only takes deeper root and stands firmer for ensuing conflicts, while the forest tree, when the woodman's axe has spoiled its surroundings, sways and bends, and trembles, and perchance is uprooted. So it is with men. Those who are trained to self-reliance are ready to go out and contend in the sternest conflicts of life; while men who have always leaned for support on those around them, are unprepared to breast the storms of adversity that arise.

The men who stand boldly for the defence of truth, in the midst of the flood of errors that abound, are not the gentlemen with hilly fingers, who have been rocked in the cradle of indulgence, and caressed in the lap of luxury; but they are men whom necessity has called from the shade of retirement, to contend under the scorching rays of the sun, with the stern realities of life, in all its vicissitudes. "It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth."

Unhealthy Positions.

Those persons engaged in occupations requiring the hands alone to move, while the lower limbs remain motionless, should bear in mind, that without constantly raising the frame to an erect position, and giving a slight exercise to all parts of the body, such a practice will tend to destroy their health. They should moreover, set in as erect a position as possible. With seamstresses, there is always more or less stooping of the head and shoulders, tending to retard circulation, respiration, and digestion, and produce curvature of the spine. The head should be thrown back, to give the lungs full play. The frequent long-drawn breaths of the seamstress evinces the cramping and confinement of the lungs. Health cannot be expected without free respiration. This life-giving element is in the atmosphere, and without it, in proportionate abundance, must disease intervene. Strength and robustness must come from exercise. Confined attitudes are violations of correct theories of healthy physical development, and the instincts of nature. Those accustomed to sit writing for hours, day after day, can form some idea of the exhausting nature of the toilsome and ill-paid labor of the poor seamstress.—Scientific American.

Use of Ice.

In health no one ought to drink ice water, for it has occasioned fatal inflammation of the stomach and bowels, and sometimes sudden death. The temptation to drink it is very great in summer; to use it at all with any safety the person should take but a single swallow at a time; take the glass from the lips for half a minute, and then another swallow, and so on. It will be found that in this way it becomes disagreeable after a few mouthfuls.

On the other hand, ice itself may be taken as freely as possible, not only without injury, but with the most striking advantage in dangerous forms of disease. If broken in sizes of a pea or bean, and swallowed as freely as practicable, without much chewing or crushing between the teeth, it will often be efficient in checking various kinds of diarrhoea, and has cured violent cases of Asiatic cholera.

A kind of cushion of powdered ice, kept to the entire scalp, has allayed violent inflammation of the brain, and arrested fearful convulsions induced by too much blood there.

Water, as cold as ice can make it, applied freely to the throat, neck and chest, with a sponge or cloth, very often affords an almost miraculous relief, and if this be followed by drinking copiously of the same ice cold element, the wetted parts wiped dry, and the child be wrapped up well in the bed clothes, it falls into a delightful and life-giving slumber.

All inflammation, internal or external, is promptly subdued by the application of ice or ice water, because it is converted into steam and rapidly conveys away the extra heat, and also diminishes the quantity of blood in the vessels of the part.

A piece of ice laid on the wrist will often arrest violent bleeding of the nose.

To drink any ice-cold liquid at meals retards digestion, chills the body, and has been known to induce the most dangerous internal congestions.

If ice is put in milk or on butter, and these are not used at the time, they lose their freshness, and become sour and stale; for the essential nature of both is changed, when once frozen and then thawed.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Reform Wanted.

False weights are given for true; short measures are marked for full; foreign names are put on domestic goods; fac similes of genuine labels are pasted on spurious packages; deceptive brands are marked on barrels; false dies are stamped on cutlery; lying dates are registered on casks; old vintages are inscribed on new wines; over values are checked on various goods; wrong names are continually given to a thousand articles in every department of trade, by which they who buy are continually deceived by those who sell, and by which the general morals of the mercantile community, as well as the standards of honor among individual men, are insensibly, yet not the less inevitably, impaired.

Now as Martin Luther nailed the ninety-five propositions to the door of the church in Wittenburg, and challenged all men to dispute them, we wish every merchant would nail to the door of his counting room some such heroic proclamation as the following, and challenge all his partners to deny them:

"That the lawful length of one foot, linear measure, is twelve inches, and not nine, ten, or eleven; that a gallon pot ought to hold four quarts and not three and a pint; that a modern bushel ought still to contain as much as the old Winchester bushel of England, and not a pint less than four pecks; that a barrel of flour which is not fit to be eaten ought not to be marked superfine; that a quire of paper ought to contain twenty-four sheets, and not eighteen or twenty-two; that a paper of tacks from a hardware store ought to number ten hundred; that the length of two hundred yards ought to be quite as great when wound around a spool, as when measured in the posts and rails of a fawn fence, or in the coils and braces of a ship's rigging."

Another great reform, somewhat different from Luther's in the XVIth century, is now needed in the XIXth; a reform not in faith but in works; not doctrinal ethics, but in practical dealings; a reform that shall call things by their right names and disown their wrong; a reform that shall enter every dry goods store and search along the shelf to measure the ribbons piece by piece, to weigh the sewing silks pound by pound, to wind the full length of thread on the spool and to mark silk and worsted only half and instead of calling it all silk; a reform that shall rust out the false stamps from every blade of cutlery, and stamp the true name only when the metal has the true ring; a reform that shall mark an honest value on every pair of boots in every shoe-maker's shop, and dry every side of wet leather in the Swamp before it goes into the scales; a reform that shall enter among the flour barrels with the vigilance of a new inspector before his official eye-sight grows weak; and that shall know the difference between 'Richmond middlings' and 'Richmond' without the middlings; and shall drive away from the Corn Exchange the peddlers who sell fraudulent branding irons, as the money changers were driven from the temple with a whip of small cords; a reform that shall go down into the darkness of wine cellars, like a spectre of justice, calling for vengeance—and that shall crush the great spiders of the wine-vault, and sweep away, like a new broom, the great bottles and the black web; and shall at last open the eyes as well as the mouths of silly men who guzzle good old wine made of last year's bad whiskey, colored and shaken together, and labelled 'from the remarkable vintage of 1830'; a reform that shall take away from the mercantile community the reproach which is now more and more often heaped upon it, that business cannot be successful without being dishonest; a reform which, in short, shall breathe into every branch of commerce and industry a true spirit of Christian equality and honor.

Such is the reform that is now needed in the Mercantile world.

The Value of Education.

The high value of mental cultivation, is another weighty motive for giving attention to reading. What is it that mainly distinguishes a man from a brute? knowledge. What makes the vast difference there is between Early Rising.

"God bless the man who first invented sleep!"
So Sarah Parz said, and so I say;
And bless him, also, that he didn't keep
His great discovery to himself; or try To make it—the lucky fellow might—
A close monopoly by "patent right!"

Yes—bless the man who first invented sleep,
(I really can't say about the invention!)
But bless the man with curious head and deep,
Who first invented, and went round advising,
That artificial cut-off—Early Rising!

"Rise with the lark, and with the lark to bed,"
Observes some solemn sentimental owl,
Maxims like these are very cheaply said;
But, see you make yourself a fool or fowl,
And whether larks have any beds at all!

"The time for honest folks to be a-bed,"
Is in the morning, if I reason right;
And he who cannot keep his previous head,
Upon his pillow till it's fairly light,
And so enjoy his forty morning winks,
Is up to knavery; or else—he drinks!

Thomson, who sang about the "Seasons," said
It was a glorious thing to rise in season;
But then he said it—lying—in his bed
At ten o'clock, A. M.—the very reason
He wrote so charmingly. The simple fact is,
His preaching wasn't sanctioned by his practice.

"Tis, doubtless, well to be sometimes awake—
Awake to duty, and awake to truth—
But when, alas! it's a nice riddle to solve,
Of our last deeds and days, we find, in sooth,
The hours that leave the slightest cause to weep
Are those we passed in childhood, or—asleep!

"Tis beautiful to leave the world awhile
For the soft visions of the gentle night;
And true, at last, from mortal care and guile,
To live, as only in the angel's sight.
In sleep's sweet rest no cozy shut-in White, at the worst, we only dream of sin!

So, let us sleep, and give the Maker praise,
I like the lad who, when his father thought
To stop his morning nap by harkened phrase
Of vagrant words by early songster caught.
Cried, "I served him right—'tis not at all surprising the wren was punished, sir, for early rising!"

The Best Estate.

The Heart is both its own estate—
The Mind it both its wealth untold;
It needs not fortune to be great,
While there's a coin surpassing gold.
No matter which way fortune leans,
Wealth makes not happiness secure;
A little mind both little means—
A narrow heart is always poor.

Scorn Fate the greatest still entails,
And misery hath its high compen-
For sorrow enters palace halls,
And queens are not exempt from tears.
The princely robe and beggar's coat,
The sword and sword, the plume and plough,
Are in the grave of equal note—
Men live but in the eternal "Now!"

Still disappointment tracks the proud,
The bravest "death defeat may fall;
The high, the rich, the courtly crowd
Find there's a calamity for all.

'Tis not the house that honor makes—
'True honor is a thing divine;
It is the mind precedence takes—
It is the spirit makes the shrine!

So keep thou yet a generous heart,
A steadfast and contented mind,
And not till death consent to part
With that, which I would fain to find both blind.

What's uttered from the life within
Is heard not by the life without;
There's always something to begin
'Tis life in faith and faith in doubt.

But grasp thou Truth—though black appears
The rugged path her steps are red—
She'll be thy friend in other spheres;
Companion in the world of God.

Progress.

Toiling in the earthly vineyard,
Many hands have found a place!
Some are nearly to the summit—
Some are at the mountain's base.

Progress is the stirring watchword,
Cheers them upward to the height;
Carot thou pause and play the laggard,
With its glories full in sight!

Who shall tell what bound or barrier
To improvement Heaven designed?
Who shall dare to fix the limits
To the onward march of mind?

Only He, who into being Called the unfathomed human soul,
He for whom the hymn of progress
Through eternity shall roll!

Anecdotes.

Husband, you should kill that hen; it is too lazy to stand up.
O no, was the reply; let her live till she becomes too lazy to lay.

Oh, dear! exclaimed Henrietta, throwing herself into the rocking chair, I'll never go to that Post Office again, to be looked out of countenance by all those men on the corner.
He is so provoking! What can I do, Sarah Jane, to stop those awful men staring me so in the face?
Do as I do, replied Sarah Jane with a sly
look; show your ankles!

YOU HAD BETTER TRY My Mother's Salve.
THIS CELEBRATED PREPARATION has obtained an enviable and world-wide reputation for its great curative properties, and has been the agent for relieving so many sufferers, restoring them to health and usefulness, that the proprietors feel it a duty they owe to the public for their generous patronage bestowed upon this Salve, to make it accessible to rich and poor, that all afflicted may avail themselves of its healing qualities.

"My Mother's Salve" Is a PERFECT CHEMICAL COMPOUND, prepared from ROOTS, HERBS and GEMS, gathered from the forest, and possesses the power of healing, soothing and PAIN-RELIEVING VIRTUES never before combined in a Salve or Ointment.

Is SAFE and EFFECTUAL, and all those troubled with RHEUMATISM, SALT RHEUM, ERYSIPELAS, GOUT, DYS- and such like diseases, will find in its use great relief, and in most cases a permanent cure.

"My Mother's Salve" In a BURN or SCALD, takes out the fire, soothes the irritating pain, and heals the wound more speedily and effectually than any other preparation.

"My Mother's Salve" Is worthy of confidence, and thousands having used it and recommended it to their friends, is a test of its worth. DIRECTIONS for USING

"My Mother's Salve" Are simple. Every mother and nurse know how to spread a plaster and dress a sore, and all who use the Salve will apply it in proportions, renewed at times, as good judgment may direct. For Rheumatism and other pains, rub the Salve smartly with the finger, in cases of Cough, Tightness of the Lungs, Sore Throat, and such like ailments, rub as in cases of Rheumatism. In any case of pain a good result follows the use of this Salve. Prepared by A. M. BECK.

Hall's Great SCROFULAR REMEDY.

THIS Purely Vegetable Preparation is pleasant and agreeable to the taste, and simple in its action, causing neither vomiting or purging. It acts directly upon the primary cause of disease, regulates the Bowels, removes all vitiated secretions, giving a healthy action to the Liver and correct tone to the Stomach. It overcomes that feeling of Languor which is often experienced in the Spring and Summer, and renovates and restores the vital energy and Physical Strength.

In thousands of cases of Scrofula and Scrofulous Humors, such as Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scald Head, Tumors, Ulcers, Bronchitis, Asthma, Coughs, Inflammatory Rheumatism, Fever, Sores, White Swelling, Dropsy, Boils, Barber's Itch, Piles, Old Sores, and all diseases which manifest themselves by Eczema or Eruptions on the Skin, it has been used with the most gratifying success, after every other known remedy has been tried and failed to afford relief.

It is also an effectual cure for Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Flatulency, Costiveness and Derangement of the Urinary Organs.

It is an infallible remedy for irregularities and other diseases peculiar to FEMALES, such as Weakness and Pain in the Back, Strangury, Affections of the Kidneys, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness and Headache.

It can be given with perfect safety and most desirable results in all cases, to any person from infancy to old age.
